THE SOCIAL WANDERER

DEAR ROAMER:

Oft times I have devoted this little letter to the activities of the married set, the younger set, and the sub-junior set. Already, I hear the bombs bursting in the air and soon the flags will fly o'er the land of the free, for what so proudly we hail—the 4th of July is nigh at hand.

Yours by the dawn's early light,

Financial Usage of the Term "Stocks and Bonds"

Stock is defined as shares or holdings, collectively, in a corporate business enterprise, attested by certificates of ownership, which usually carry on their face a statement of the sum (known as the par of the stock) which purports to represent the actual investment of money or its equivalent on each unit share. The aggregate par value of all shares outstanding constitutes the capital stock of the company. Certificates having no face value are called "no par stock."

Bonds are given by a government or corporation as an evidence of debt, usually for the purpose of borrowing money; also, any one of a series of instruments evidencing an integral part of such a debt; as, a $1,000 Liberty bond. Hence, loosely, any interest-bearing certificate issued by a government or corporation, especially when a date is set for payment of the principal.

The bonds issued by corporations, private or municipal, are usually secured by a lien or mortgage upon property; those by governments are not, as a citizen could not enforce his lien. Many forms or kinds of bonds are sufficiently described by their names, as coupon bonds, mortgage bonds, first-mortgage bonds, sinking-fund bonds and so on.—Indianapolis News.

Peculiarities of the Eel

The eel is a peculiar aquatic creature. Those taken in fresh water are all females. The males never leave the brackish coastal waters. When the spawning urge sets in the breeding females leave fresh water and travel to the ocean, if the can make it. Here they meet the males and a strange migration sets in to great ocean depths. The young fry, hatched in salt water, begin their journey to the coastal waters when about one year old. At this time they are transparent and known as glass eels or elvers. The females ascend fresh water streams and rivers, while the males remain in salt water. They feed and grow until maturity is reached and then this life cycle is repeated.

Franz Schubert, Composer, Started Career When Ten

Franz Schubert, Austrian composer, was born January 31, 1797, at Lichtenthal, a village just north of Vienna. From early childhood he had a phenomenal intuition for playing instruments and for composition, but his father, who was the parish schoolmaster, did not have the means to give him a musical training. He did, however, guide his son's talent, and with the aid of the local choirmaster, Franz was composing songs and violin solos at the age of ten years. Also at this age he was made first soprano in the choir of Lichtenthal. Later he was admitted to the Imperial Konvikt, a school in Vienna, where he received a further education in music.

In 1818 Schubert spent some months at Zelesz, Hungary, as music master in Count Estrehazy's family. After his return to Vienna in 1819 his song, "Schafers Klagelied," was performed in public. In 1825 he and his friend, Vogl, made a tour in which his songs were given to the public, Vogl singing them to Schubert's accompaniment.

Schubert next directed his attention to dramatic music, and in 1827 his prospects had decidedly brightened. He worked ceaselessly, his compositions surpassing his former achievements and bringing many demands from foreign publishers. But poverty and hard work had so weakened him physically that he became ill with typhoid fever, which caused his death. He died in Vienna on November 19, 1828.

Palace Famous for Library

The Antici Mattei palace in Rome is known chiefly for its library, which has a huge collection of books dealing with American history and numerous other subjects. The library also has 10,000 prints and engravings, some of which are of great value, and paintings representing memorable events in American history.
