Alexander Graham Bell Among World's Greatest Inventors

Who are the twelve greatest American inventors? Who are these men of genius, considered in light of the value of their work for the present time?

These questions were answered by a committee of scientists chosen at the recent celebration of the Centennial of the American Patent System held in Washington, D. C.

Heading the alphabetical list of the twelve chosen was Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, followed by Thomas A. Edison of the incandescent lamp, talking machine and other fame; Robert Fulton, first commercial steamboat; Charles Goodyear, vulcanization process for rubber; Charles Martin Hall, aluminum manufacturer; Elias Howe, sewing machine; Cyrus H. McCormick, practical reaper; Ottmar Mergenthaler, linotype; Samuel F. B. Morse, telegraph; George Westinghouse, air brake; Wilbur Wright, airplane, and Eli Whitney, cotton gin.

Dramatically beginning the honor roll call with the name of the telephone inventor, the voice of the individual making the announcement came to the assembly hall by radio telephone from a transport airliner in the sky overhead. Another thrill for the audience was hearing Edison's voice from a record he had made on one of his machines. Morse's first telegraph message was also sent from Baltimore to Washington—the same route it traveled ninety-three years ago.

Sixty-one years ago, on March 7, 1876, the fundamental patent for the telephone was issued to Bell. Following this basic invention, he made many improvements. A host of other telephone pioneers, following in his footsteps, continued to improve and adapt the telephone to one purpose and another. The work of research and development is carried steadily forward today by the scientists of the Bell Telephone Laboratories in New York City.

Camels' Use in Battle

Tribal battles between the Arabs of North Africa always end in a sudden retreat of the side which first discovers it has only one camel left for every three men, says Collier's Weekly. Three is all a "mehari," or racing camel, can save at one time, two riding on its back and one hanging onto its tail.

When Paints Were Edible

According to history, paints made in early Colonial times were edible. Boiled rice, skimmed milk and salt were among the raw materials used in making homemade paints. Early American cook books contained formulas for making the various colors desired.

Famous marriage certificates are preserved at Somerset House, London, says London Answers Magazine. When George Fox, the founder of the Quakers, was wed in 1669, 22 persons signed the register. The certificate of marriage of William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, is dated 1672 and bears the signatures of 46 witnesses.

ON THE SCREEN AT THE NEW LYCEUM

RADIO FAVORITES—Benny Goodman, of swing fame, and Frances Langford, blues crooner, step up to the mike to take a bow for their work in "Hollywood Hotel," the new musical film coming to the New Lyceum Theatre on Monday and Tuesday, February 7 and 8.

Millions of radio fans who listen in on the "Hollywood Hotel" air show undoubtedly imagine it is broadcast from an actual hotel of that name, magnificent beyond anything else ever conceived. In fact there is little guesswork about that, for many citizens of the cinema capital have had tourists approach them on Hollywood Boulevard and ask directions to the hotel.

Warner Bros. must have had something of the sort in mind when they started producing a spectacular film-musical of the same name as the air-show out at their studio. And in stage settings for the production they set out to give the fans a concrete visualization of the hotel of their dreams. Investigating rumors of colossal spending, this correspondent visited the Orchid Room set. Now, we've seen hotels, but—they've got something there!

As we skirt the side lines, out of camera range, it's hard to make our feet behave. For Benny Goodman and his famous swing band are playing "Christopher Columbus." The Orchid Room looks like a vast flower basket at the bottom of which are clumps of living flowers. They are the lovely women seated around at tables or swaying on the dance floor.

Now Frances Langford drifts up with Bob Haas, Puckish art director. Pleased as Punch he tells us about the set. The vast room is floored in black glass. Circular walls are of delphinium blue satin, 1500 yards of it.

"Hollywood Hotel," which stars Dick Powell, comes to the New Lyceum on Monday and Tuesday, February 7 and 8. In the cast are such notables as Rosemary and Lola Lane, Hugh Herbert, Ted Healy, and the famed writer and radio impressario Louella Parsons. Then also there are Benny Goodman's famous Swing Band and Raymond Paige's Orchestra.

As a gag-tossing, heart-breaking New York belle of the nineties, Mae West is just as you like her in "Every Day's a Holiday," which comes on Wednesday and Thursday, February 9 and 10 to The New Lyceum Theatre. From her hilarious meeting with her first horseless carriage on the Brooklyn Bridge, to the final scene in front of Madison Square Garden where she stages a political rally to stop all political rallies, she is the bold, swaggering, riotous character always associated with the name Mae West.

In the story, which she wrote herself, Mae is the toast of the Bowery whose shady business deals always keep her only two or three steps ahead of the police. Throughout the picture she is out of sympathy with the law and its servants. As she expresses it to her boy friend, the captain of detectives, Edmund Lowe, "You got me all wrong. I may crack a law now and then but I never broke one."

The captain looks at the brighter side of her character and keeps her free of crooked Police Inspector Lloyd Nolan, who wants to slap her into jail. When the town gets too hot for her she goes away and returns as Mademoiselle Fifi, whose airy Parisian manners and French accent put all New York at her feet. In order to get even with Lloyd when he runs for mayor, she runs Lowe against him as her own candidate with the backing of the local good government league. After a hectic campaign put on in Mae's own style,Lowe wins the election in a landslide.

The colorful types called for in the supporting cast are well filled by Charles Butterworth, Charles Winninger and Walter Catlett. In his able direction A. Edward Sutherland has recreated perfectly the atmosphere of the New York of 1900.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!
