HEAVEN OR PEACHES.—What a Jerseyman Thinks of Peninsula Peach Culture.—A Jerseyman, a resident of Kent county, Md., writes the Woodbury (N. J.) Constitution:

"Peach buds are not supposed to be materially injured in this section. My opinion is that it would be an incalculable blessing to the State of Maryland if every bud was blasted beyond hope for five years to come. I have been down here now these six years, and in all that time have heard of but two things, viz: peaches and politics; and with the all predominating principle of ignorant greed of gain both are turned into a curse instead of a blessing. One thousand fruit trees of different varieties on most farms is a plenty, and can be made profitable, even if there is no demand for them abroad. But instead of planting reasonable orchards, many have set out nearly their entire available lands, and some all of it, and have to buy the bread they eat. And this is not the worst of it—many thousands of acres are being still planted. It was supposed that there were peaches enough wasted in Maryland last year to stock the Philadelphia market. At one time they threatened to block up Baltimore harbor. Still, peaches, all the day long, is their joy and their song. Apples are almost entirely ignored. The peach down here is the "irrepressible conflict!"—the daily hash. The first question if you go to church is, "Are your peach buds hurt?" The subject is discussed before preaching and after preaching.—A man the other day, after pronouncing his "amen," arose from his knees and asked, "what is the prospect for peaches?" I fear, seriously, many people will miss heaven on account of peaches."

Orchard and Nursery.

We will take it for granted that the ground has been properly plowed and prepared for early spring planting, and that trees have been ordered in time.

Planting can be performed as soon as the trees arrive, but if this is not done at once, see that the roots are properly protected from winds and sun. When the trees are set, trim the mutilated roots, shorten the branches, and remove all useless ones. Take care not to plant the trees too deep, but make a broad opening and spread the roots in a natural position, then cover with fine soil, well pressed down. When trees arrive in poor order, resulting from improper packing, and the bark appears shriveled, bury entirely in the soil, and in a few days they will look fresh and plump if not too far gone.—Trees that have started into growth during their journey must be cut back severely.

Grafting.—As soon as the buds commence to swell grafting may be done, but do not commence too early.

Cions.—Cut at any time before the buds start, and preserve in sawdust or earth until needed.

Root-grafts.—Plant in nursery rows as soon as the ground is in proper order.

Seeds of fruit and ornamental trees may be planted in nursery rows or in beds, but it is better to wait until next month before planting any tree seeds, except nuts, peach-stones, etc., which were buried last fall.

Insects.—Continue to destroy all injurious insects wherever found, both in the egg and larva or grub state. If the trees have not been washed with soapsuds, they should be gone over with a moderately stiff brush as soon as convenient.

Transplanting.—Transplanting trees from the nursery rows and set where they are to grow, or else make them into rows where they will have sufficient room to grow for several years.

Orchard Grass Seed.

More attention is now being paid to the sowing of orchard grass seed with clover. Farmers are slow to take hold of suggestions that seem to be new, and in general they are right—but some things appear to be so self-evident, that it is strange they are overlooked. We years ago recommended most strenuously this admixture, but it only appears within the last year or two that its great advantages have been fully realized. Upon every acre of the wheat field, sow 12 lbs. clover seed and 2 bushels of orchard grass seed, the clover first, by itself, and the orchard grass afterwards; the latter moisten previous to sowing, and let it lie on the floor where it is spread for the purpose, 12 hours before sowing, first mixing it with twice its bulk of sand or ashes, the more readily to distribute it. The combination makes a much better hay than clover alone; it produces more hay the first cutting; the aftermath is greater; the autumn pasture more luxuriant and enduring, and cattle are not so apt to be affected by hoven by it. As both come into bloom about the same time, when it should be cut, the objection of coarseness against the orchard grass is obviated; and the rapidity of its growth is likely to protect the clover plants after wheat harvest, after which period an additional protection to the plants from the sun will be found in sowing 2 bushels of salt and 1 of plaster per acre, as soon as the wheat is removed from the field, as this top-dressing attracts moisture from the atmosphere, and thus stimulates the plants; the salt and plaster are of themselves manure, and they also act as agents to draw food from the air.—American Farmer.

A Talk About Fences.

This matter of fence-making is a constantly recurring one. Any day in the year we may go out on the farm and find a board gone here, a post or rail to be put in there, or a section to be built in, wholly new. No farmer can say we have reached perfection in fencing; the majority of fences throughout the country show to the contrary. Neither can one tell with certainty what model our future ones will be built after. We seem to care but little for hedges, and wire fence works in but slowly. There is a great plenty of patent articles for us to select from, but they don't seem to take. Somehow they get out of public notice, and that's the end of them. A friend suggests build none at all. We cannot follow him there, for we have not yet learned to conform ourselves to fenceless farming.

Whatever we make them of, they should be straight; land and timber are too valuable to be wasted in crooked fences.—We can then run our mower close up on each side and cut every weed clean. Yet much of our straight rail fence soon leans from being badly built. We can improve them considerable by setting a post well down, and driving a stake beside it.—Then the rails should be light, to take away all unnecessary strain on the post. Well wired, this fence will stand many years longer than if two stakes were driven down, as is commonly done.

Board fence that is nearly worn out can be made to last several years by spiking long poles to the top of the post. Some thousand badly we repaired in this way, and in course large stock fall as well as a newness.

We good's board fence as I ever saw was built with half the posts on one side the board and half on the other side. It never knew which way to lean, and so stood upright. Durability and strength were happily united in this fence, which was built over thirty years ago.

Fences along railway lines are generally built with the face side toward the track. This is poor policy; there is nothing on the railway to fence out. The point is to keep our stock in the fields; therefore the boards should be nailed on the field side of the post. North and south fences, and all that are exposed to strong winds from a given point, will do the best service with the boards on the windward side.—Cor. of the Country Gentleman.

THE EUREKA
FANNING MILL.
THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY!
Farmers Look to Your Interest!
THE attention of Farmers and Mechanics is particularly directed to the combined economy, utility and practicability of the Eureka Mill, and to the many other advantages it possesses over every other Fanning Mill which has been introduced to the public.
It is the fruit of long and patient investigation by the inventor, who has made it his constant study for over twenty years. He has secured several patents for Mills, and has always been rewarded with the best of success. But not feeling satisfied with his former attainments, he determined to reach the climax, and he now believes that his new invention will warrant him in exclaiming in the joy of his heart, like the philosopher, Phythagoras—EUREKA!—signifying in the Grecian language, "I have found it." This has given the name to this new Mill.
In this Mill are all the former improvements to which have been added several more, adding still greater advantages than were at first anticipated, or even thought possible by the inventor himself. It embraces the three great essentials necessary in every invention:
It combines ECONOMY, UTILITY and PRACTICABILITY!
THE "EUREKA" MILL
Is small and lighter, and is capable of doing more and better work in a given time than any other Mill ever invented.
IT IS THE ONLY MILL
that will successfully remove from wheat all such pests as Cockle, Garlic, Oats, Rye, &c.
Should an extra quality of grain for seed or gristing purposes be required, it can be so arranged as to catch in one box perfect grain, and in the other, grain fit for market or mill. Here is made a great saving usually lost sight of: for nearly one quarter of the grain cleaned in the common Mill is lost when sown, on account of shrunken kernels and inferior grain. The Eureka Mill saves all this, and gives seed every kernel of which will grow when put into the ground, and this saving will, in a short time, pay for the Mill.
HINES & BURCHINAL,
Chestertown, Maryland,
Owners of the Mill, are having them manufactured at the Sash Factory and Planing Mill of Noland & Co., Port Deposit, Md., which is a guarantee that they will be put up in the best manner. je17-tf.
