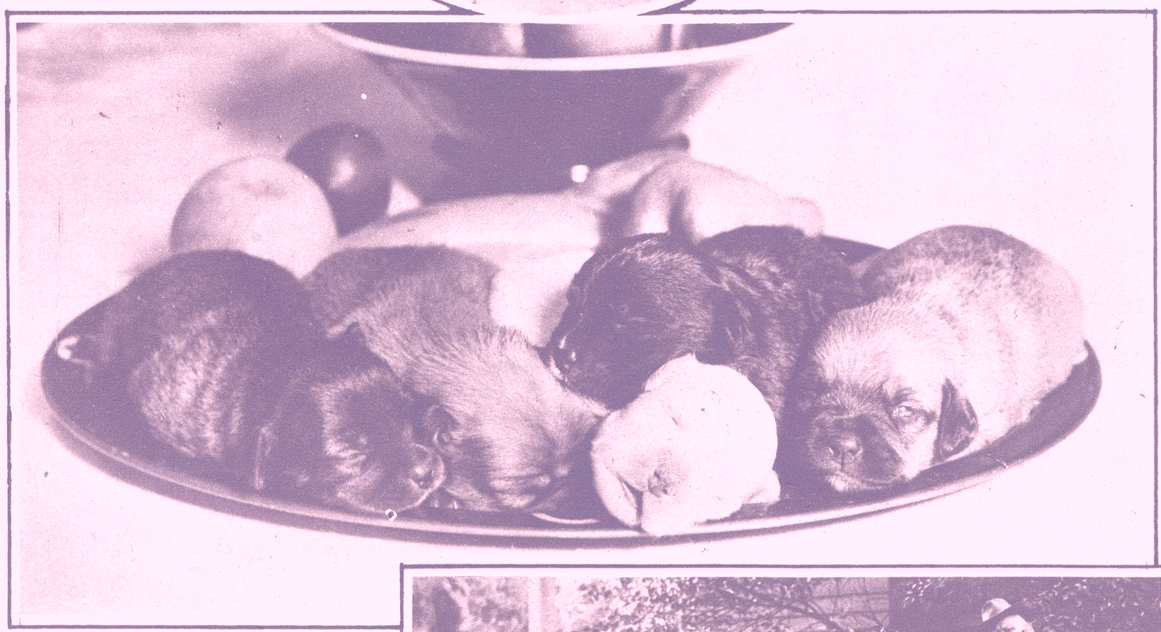
WHEN BUSINESS STOPPED COMING TO THE HOTEL THE OWNER MOVED THE HOTEL TO WHERE THE BUSINESS WAS COMING.—The Johnson Hotel, formerly the Hotel of Nahcotta, Wash. The last year, owing to increased automobile traffic, which caused the railroads to take off two trains and the steamboat companies to take off two boats, business became very slack. Nothing daunted the the proprietor, so he loaded his hotel on a scow and moved it across Willapa Harbor to South Bend, Wash.



HOT DOGS?

Puppies taking a siesta on a serving tray after their hunger had been satisfied. Puzzle, find the body of the white headed pup, which is evidently oblivious to the whole world.

THE MUSHROOM ICEBERG, WONDERFUL WORK OF NATURE. This is said to be the most unusual form of iceberg ever photographed. It shows a giant berg which through the action of water and winds has been sculptured by nature into a replica of a giant mushroom. This photograph was made by Captain Frank Hurley, noted explorer and photographer, during a trip to the South Pole regions. International

WHO'LL GUARD FIRST SUB WHEN HE DIES?
Lieut. Francis J. Wehner, last of the "Suicide Club" of the old Fifth Louisiana Infantry of the Confederate Army, and the shell of the first submarine. Built by the Confederacy in New Orleans in the closing days of the Civil War, it was to be used in a last attempt to break the Yankee blockade. A one-man affair worked by hand power paddles, its purpose was to get as near an enemy ship as possible, when a sight would be taken, the manhole closed, the sub sunk and then to grope its way to the side of the ship and be blown up—together with its victim. The plan was never carried out and the sub was sunk in Lake Pontchartrain. It is set up in the grounds of the Confederate Veterans Home near the spot where it had rested so many years. United
