LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22, 1875.

The case of William Westervelt, charged with conspiring with Mosher and Douglass to abduct and conceal Charles Brewster Ross, after an able charge from Judge Elcock, was given to the jury on Saturday morning. At 10 o'clock on Monday morning, amid breathless stillness, in a court room crowded to its utmost capacity, the jury gave their verdict. This trial has excited intense public interest, as was shown by the immense crowds which daily thronged the Criminal Court. During most of the time Westervelt seemed to be full of confidence, and paid careful attention to all that was said both for and against him. It was only when his counsel began the final appeal in his behalf that, by trembling limb and anxious expression, he showed his fear as to the result. As the jury filed through the crowded aisle he looked up and his eye brightened; but when the foreman, in replying to the clerk, broke the now painful silence with the words, so big with meaning to the poor wretch in the dock, "Guilty on the last three counts of the Indictment," Westervelt, wholly unmanned, dropped his head. The star of hope for him had gone down in gloom, and realizing, perhaps for the first time, that the verdict meant long years of imprisonment, he wept like a child. His wife, true to woman's nature, clung to him to the last. His counsel immediately made a motion in arrest of judgment, and will endeavor to get a new trial. If this be not granted, and it seems highly improbable, the prisoner will doubtless receive the full penalty of the law—a fine of two thousand dollars, and imprisonment by separate or solitary confinement for seven years.

From first to last the story of the abduction of Charley Ross, as revealed by this trial, is full of strange and thrilling interest. Fiction, in her modest flights, has produced nothing to equal it. Stolen from his home on a beautiful sunny day in July, 1874, his place of concealment is still a profound mystery. The eye of love, peering into the darkness of the future, can see little to encourage hope. The news of the abduction, as it flashed over the wires, startled the country. It was a crime so unusual, so audacious, so vile in its character, that it shocked humanity, and subsequent developments renders it a disgrace to our civilization. The united efforts of the police of two cities, and the ceaseless vigilance of every respectable man, woman and child in the community, failed to bring the abductors to light; and nothing was known to the public concerning them until they were struck down, in darkness and blood, on that dismal morning in December, and only then because one of the miserable wretches, on the verge of eternity, sought to unburden his guilty soul. As the story was slowly recited under the compulsory process of the law, we could not tell at which to wonder most—the impotency of the police, the audacity of the abductors, their horrible fate, or the truly pathetic story of the bereaved father as he told of his wandering up and down the land at the command of the stealers of his child, ready to do anything if they would only restore his boy.

With the death of the abductors, the strange mystery only began. Where is the child? Is he living, or are his abductors' hands stained with his blood? By what lonely wayside or in what dark cave of the deep has he found a grave? Millions of prayers have doubtless been offered for his safe return, and many a fond mother has pressed her own babe more tightly to her bosom as she thought and wondered, shuddering lest some fiend in human shape should take her own darling child.

Mr. Ross believes that his child is alive, and is working hard for his recovery. It seems hard to believe that a human being can exist with soul so dead as, knowing the whereabouts of Charley Ross, not to reveal it. Yet the fact that during the trial of Westervelt, Mr. Ross has received twenty anonymous letters, each claiming to know where the child is, forces us to the conclusion that there are scoundrels working to obtain a reward for their knowledge. I imagine that it would not be healthy for them to be caught in Philadelphia. In a recent interview Mr. Ross said: "Pinkerton's Agency have spent over $18,000 in this case; I have spent all I had and much more, and my brother-in-law has also spent a good many thousands; I am now broken down in health and spirits and am penniless." The principal conspirators met a violent death, and now another, in obedience to the mandate of outraged justice, seeks a prison cell to hide his shame. "The wheels of the Gods grind slowly but they grind exceeding fine." As man seems impotent to affect anything further, may the "wheels of the Gods" grind on until all who have been engaged in this foul crime shall be made to feel their crushing and relentless weight.

NEMA.

Important Results Pleasantly Achieved.

Although the day of irrational medication are happily passing away, and intelligent physicians have ceased to measure the supposed efficacy of a remedy by the violence of its effects, there still linger among the older practitioners a few of those predilections in favor of "heroic" treatment, which it would be lucky for their patients if they had abandoned. One of these is a fondness for administering drastic purgatives, such as blue pill, calomel, jalap and castor oil. A contrast of the effects of these drenching drugs with the mild and beneficent operation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the very best argument that can be adduced against the wisdom of such destructive treatment. The old fashioned cathartics convulse the stomach, and relax the bowels so abruptly and copiously as to weaken them. Hostetter's Bitters, on the contrary, never gripe the intestines, but produce a laxative effect resembling the action of nature. At the same time they remove the cause of constipation, by arousing the dormant liver to secrete the bile necessary to the regular performance of the excretive function, and enable the stomach to thoroughly digest the food. Indigestion and biliousness having been thus overcome, a regular habit of body is the necessary consequence, which the occasional subsequent use of the Bitters renders permanent. Every disagreeable symptom which, in the absence of perfect digestion and evacuation, harrasses the system, vanishes under the influence of the great national stomachic and alterative. Health and vigor are twin blessings that follow its use.

The State Finances — Unexampled Prosperity.

An elaborate address has been prepared and published by the Democratic State Central Committee, chiefly in refutation of slanderous charges which have emanated from radicals and soreheaded sources, in regard to the management of the State finances. We give the following extracts:

The finances of the State are in a condition of unexampled prosperity, and we frankly challenge a comparison of the condition of the Treasury with that of any State in the Union. Its credit is at the highest point, and its certificates of debt are sought for in all quarters as the safest investments for which the largest price is paid. Indeed, its stocks can hardly be purchased at any reasonable figures, and wherever offered are seized upon by capitalists with the greatest avidity. A reference to the daily reported stock list will verify this assertion.

The expenditures of the State Government are being rapidly reduced. Under the last two years of Radical rule, as compared with those of the Democrats, the result is generally in favor of the latter. Under the former, the expenditures in 1865 were $3,125,563 53, in 1866 $3,390,617 58. While under the Democratic control they were in 1873 $2,287,038-36, and in 1874 $2,276,906 35.

The management of the financial operations of the State under the Democratic Conservative party is irreproachable, and challenging contradiction on this point we invite investigation from all quarters into the affairs of the Treasury. Important steps have been taken to insure the equalization of taxation, which has heretofore been so much needed in the State. By the revenue measures of the last session, of which so much ignorance is displayed, all church property, other than the church building thmselves, and the parsonages, are subject to taxation, as other property.

In fact all property in this State which has been or can be legitimately reached by taxation will be made to contribute to the support of the State and Municipal Governments,

With the results of the Revenue laws of the last session the public may well be satisfied, in spite of the carpings of the misinformed; and the increase of the revenue thus produced will afford an opportunity to the Legislature of the next sessions to reduce its present taxes. The citizens of the State will remember that the Democratic Legislature of 1872 repealed the direct tax, and that since that time no direct State tax has been imposed on the people for the support of the State Government.

No State taxes are now levied except for the support of our admirable public school system and the payment of the interest on the public debt. The revenue from licenses to foreign insurance companies has been more than doubled in the past few years. The amount received from traders and retailers, and other licenses, and the income of the available resources of the State, are now not only sufficient to the support of the State Government, but contribute in part to the payment of the interest of the public debt.

No truthful man who chooses to inform himself can hesitate to say that the condition of the State Treasury is as healthful as it is possible for it to be.

The same feeling of satisfaction can be indulged in after a brief examination of the affairs of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, for whose management the Democratic party is now held responsible. From a gross revenue of $726,581 42 in 1865, it increased in 1874 to more than double that amount, which showing is highly creditable, and proves beyond cavil, that under Democratic management it has advanced toward becoming a paying investment for the State.

Into the affairs of this Company we therefore, with the same confidence, invoke your careful inquiry, and we are satisfied that, as with the Treasury Department, its management will command the decided approbation of the impartial people of Maryland. We have confined our remarks to State matters because they are subjects with which we feel ourselves especially called upon to deal. The executive officers of the city of Baltimore are fully capable of vindicating successfully their management of the financial affairs of that city.

We think that we have fairly and frankly disposed of all the insinuations (for nothing has been stated that rises to the dignity of an accusation) which have been made as to the Treasury and Canal management by Democratic officials, and we feel confident that the intelligence and patriotism of the people cannot be so clouded by the partizan clamor of those who have lost power by their own reckless abuse of it, as to destroy the future prosperity of Maryland by committing its government to those who were, in 1867, driven from power by the immense uprising of the people of this State.

Citizens of Maryland! we have thus briefly portrayed your present happy financial condition, and sought calmly and truthfully to warn you of your danger. We have stated only facts, and recalled to you the plain teachings of the past. We have presented to you as candidates for State offices, men whose record for patriotism, intelligence and purity of character cannot be surpassed, and it remains for you, in your several counties and the city of Baltimore, to aid them by the election of your best men to the Legislature, that by their united efforts such reforms as experience may show to be necessary shall be secured under the administration of the Democratic Conservative party.

That its management in the past may have been at times not as discreet as, in the judgement of its adherents, it might have been, is possible; yet judged by the general results of its government of this State, it will challenge the approval of all fair and impartial men.

WHANN'S

Raw Bone Super Phosphate

MANUFACTURED BY

WALTON, WHANN & CO.,

WILMINGTON, DEL.

In the culture of Wheat, true economy implies the use of such manures as produce the greatest yield, and at the same time leaves the land in the best condition for grass.

Whann's Raw Bone Super Phosphate

is extensively used on this important crop for the reason that it fulfills these conditions.—The grass often paying for the fertilizer, leaving the increased yield of wheat clean profit. No fertilizer has ever excelled it. Combining the active qualities of the best Peruvian Guano with the most lasting properties of dissolved bone, it is unexcelled as a manure for wheat.

Those farmers who have used

WHANN'S RAW BONE

Super Phosphate

need no reminder as to its worth. Their continued use of it year after year is the strongest argument which can be brought to prove its merits.

Farmers who have not yet used this renowned fertilizer are earnestly requested to
