Burying Manure in the Soil.

Perhaps in no better way is the progress of agriculture illustrated than in the manner of applying manure now and the course of practice of a century ago. Now it is thought of applying manure on the surface. It was dead vegetable matter and must be buried; and like all dead things the sooner it was put out of sight the greater profit to the living plants. Ellwanger, in his cyclopedia of agriculture, still puts the belief in the past when he says "the quicker farm yard manure is buried the better."

This is not true. Any cyclopedist who would write thus would not command the respect of intelligent readers. There is some difference of opinion among some of our best farmers as to how near the surface the manure is to be put, but none favors burying it. Some will have it that it is best just above, some prefer it just below; but that it should be somewhere near the surface all believe.

The great argument used for burying manure by people of the past, was that so much of the valuable matter escaped in the atmosphere. So much benefit has been found to result from surface manuring, that many argue that what escapes is no great loss. But this is probably an error. It is now known the reason for the great fertility which follows a dry season is owing to the absorbent power of dry earth which takes in from the atmosphere the nitrogenous particles which have escaped from the decaying vegetable matter. This shows that the atmosphere is a mine of richness, and that we add to this mine every time we expose our manure heaps to its influences. If we can save this to ourselves—if we can hold it from passing into this airy nothingness—it must be to our advantage to do so.

The advantages which have flowed from surface manuring are not probably because there is no loss, but because the roots of plants can make better use of what is left. If we dig out a young tree we find that most of its roots are just below the surface; an inch or so deeper there are fewer roots, and as we go deeper there are still less. We may find some roots six feet or more down but the bulk are just beneath the surface. The food in this surface-manuring system is, therefore, just where the mass of roots can profit by it. This is no doubt the plan. In this way the surface advocates have won their victory in spite of the loss, and because there is no loss of good plant-food by the exposure.

This is the principle on which so much good has been found to flow from mixing dry earth with manure. It is stated that one of the best farmers in New York hauls under cover during summer a large quantity of dry earth, which he keeps dry, and that during the winter season he adds this to his manure heap, about a load for load. The result, he says, is that this load of added earth is equal to another load of stable manure. It takes up the gases which he says would have gone into the atmosphere. It has no added anything to the manure, but simply saved what would have been lost.

These are all things bearing on this question of deep-manuring. The soil below is never very dry, and hence cannot take up much. When near the surface the law comes into play. The surface-roots, surface feeding and dry surface earth all argue against the deep deposit of manure.—Germantown Telegraph.

SHEEP.

THE New York Herald publishes the following article on a subject that is interesting our farmers more and more:

It is not desirable that a breeding flock should be keep mutton-fat all the year, nor indeed at any time. Good, strong, store condition is all that is required. But they should never be allowed to run down in flesh for want of food, as changes in the condition of the carcass readily and sensibly affect the quality of the fibre in the wool. Evenness, truness and strength are important qualities in wool, and these can only be secured by health and uniformity of condition. A fat sheep grows coarse, strong wool, and a lean one a finer weaker wool, and in cases where the changes in condition are sudden and considerable, the difference in size will form a kind of shoulder or joint in the fiber at which point it will break in working. Hence a long wool which is not so true and even and sound cannot be used as a combing wool; it breaks and is only for coarse fabrics; hence also the mistake of understanding the propogation of long-wooled sheep among us in the present state of our agriculture and before the tame grasses or rye pasture and shed for their protection from storms. They should be weaned at four months and possible removed for a few days to a point beyond the call of their dams. They should be allowed at once good food and shelter from storms. Their food should contain a sufficient number of roughs for all to feed without waste and into these should be put a root or brand with salt, and on the approach of cold weather early cut and cured, millet hay or bright sheaf should be laid each night in suitable places, they may learn to eat and become accustomed to dry food before winter. They should never be allowed to run in flesh, but so fed as to be steadily growing through the fall months. Perhaps there is no pasturage superior to the growth of young clover of a rye-field or one that has been lightly fatten older sheep.

THERE IS NEW YORK.—A Senator Chandler says he lost his own pocket $37,000 in the presidential campaign. Mr. Chandler did not vote for the republican ticket, it is known.

Gov. ROBINSON INTERVIEWED.—An interviewer from the New York World has had a talk with Gov. Robinson. He says that on the expiration of his term of service he will return to his home to attend to his business, which has been sadly neglected of late; that the late fight was purely a local one, and he has little doubt that, with a presidential candidate acceptable, not to any section of the party, but to all of the party, New York can be carried by the democrats in 1880. When asked if he favored the nomination of Mr. Tilden again for the presidency, Gov. Robinson replied: "That question I don't care to answer just now. It is not the proper time, nor is my opinion of sufficient importance about it to carry any weight. Mr. Tilden is a warm friend of mine, and if nominated he would have my support, as would any other candidate who might be chosen by the national convention; but as to the policy of nominating Mr. Tilden I really have no opinion to express one way or the other." When asked what he thought of Bayard as a candidate, he responded: "A noble and pure man, without a stain on his escutcheon. I only hope for his own sake that he may not be nominated, for they would abuse him unmercifully. He would not escape calumny, and his previous record would not avail him. The torrent of vituperation would be let loose on him as soon as he received the nomination." He thought the ticket recently suggested of Hendricks and Potter would be a very strong one, but he "was not at all sure of the policy of swopping horses in just that way while crossing a stream."

BUTLER is, without exception, the most irrepressible politician that this country has ever produced. Two such sucessive defeats as he has met with in Massachusetts would have forever dispirited any other man; but, in spite of his recent disastrous political venture, he is as lively as a cricket, and warns his enemies that he is just warming up to his work. He has the supreme impudence to talk about sending a delegation to the National Democratic Convention next year, and will doubtless carry out his intention. He will find, however, that it will be easier to send a delegation than to get it admitted, and that, though he may be able to "run" a part of the Massachusetts Democracy, he will not be allowed to manage the national Democratic party. As long as he confines himself to worrying the Massachusetts Republicans we have no special objection to his political gymnastics, but when he attempts to put his fingers in the national Democratic pie he will get sharply rapped over the knuckles for his pains.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.—Several yrs. ago Wm. R. Hines, of New York, died in Europe from the result of an accident, leaving his wife, Mary Eliza Hines, and two children. He owned a house in that city which his sisters took possession of, claiming it as their property, on the ground that he had not been legally married, and that the children were illegitimate. Suit was begun by Mrs. Hines and the guardian of the children for the recovery of the profits of the house, and also for the possession thereof. The main question involved was whether Mrs. Hines was the legitimate wife of Mr. Hines or not. There had been no marriage ceremony performed, but they mutually agreed in the presence of a witness to become man and wife. The jury on the trial decided that the marriage was binding, and that the children were legitimate and entitled to the property. An appeal was taken to the general term of the Court of Common Pleas, and Monday that court rendered a decision affirming the decision of the court below.

HOW COFFEE CAME TO BE USED.—It is somewhat singular to trace the manner in which arose the use of the common beverage of coffee, without which few persons in any half or fully civilized country in the world, make breakfast. At the time Columbus discovered America it had never before been known or used. It grew only in Arabia and Upper Ethiopia. The discovery of its use as a beverage is ascribed to the superior of a monastery in Arabia, who, desirous of preventing the monks from sleeping at their nocturnal services, made them drink the infusion of coffee upon the reports of the Shepherds, who observed that their flocks were more likely after browsing on the fruit of the plant. Its reputation spread through the adjacent countries, and in two hundred years it reached Paris. A single plant, brought there in 1714, became the parent stock of all the French plantations in the West Indies. The Dutch introduced it into Java and the East Indies.

GENERAL BUTLER makes the rather startling announcement that "Massachusetts has never had a Republican form of government in fact—only in form." An educational and property qualification deprives 100,000 working men of the elective franchise. He also shows that Massachusetts has three more Representatives in Congress than she is entitled to, because she includes the practically disfranchised workingmen in the basis of representation.

THEY tell a queer story about the doctors in certain towns in Maryland, who were all away last summer to attend a medical convention. They were absent about two months, and on their return found that all their patients had recovered, the drug stores closed, the nurses had opened dancing schools, the cemetery had been cut up into building lots, the undertakers gone into making fiddles, and the hearse has been painted and sold for a circus wagon.

MANY women are like coins. Worth only their face value.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine prescribed by physicians or sold by Druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's GERMAN SYRUP for severe Coughs, Colds settled on the breast, Consumption, or any disease of the Throat and Lungs. A proof of that is that any person afflicted can get a sample bottle for 10 cts. and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cts. It has lately been introduced into this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures astonishing every one that use it. There is no humbug in it in any case. Try it. Sold by all druggists. MALTBY HOUSE.
BALTIMORE.
APRIL 1st, 1879.
Recognizing the fact that the relationship existing between the counties of Maryland and the City of Baltimore is such that residents of the Counties have occasion to visit the city frequently during the year; in consideration of these facts and the liberal patronage extended the "Maltby" in the past, I deem it but a matter of justice that some discrimination should be made in their favor. I have therefore concluded to Reduce Price of Board to $2 per Day
feeling confident that the same will be fully appreciated by them, and at same time merit and secure an increased share of their patronage. Assuring them that nothing will be left undone that can add to their comfort during their stay.
ROOMS, without board, 75 cts. and upward per day.
