

55-1839

TO Ross Winans of Baltimore is due credit for many advanced devices of his day. He built for Baltimore and Ohio, in its Mount Clare shops (Baltimore) and in his own works, a type of locomotive—generally known as the “camel”—distinctive in appearance and distinguished for pulling strength, to which the road clung for many years.