(Concluded from first page.)

"Well, but what would you have me do?" asked M. Godard, calmly.

"I'm going to throw you over," said the madman with a wild laugh; "but first an idea strikes me; I'll go up to the top of the balloon," and, suiting the action to the word, he jumped into the rigging of the balloon.

"Come, my poor friend, this is nonsense, you'll kill yourself like one!"

The madman uttered a threat. "At least," said M. Godard, "let me put a rope round your waist to prevent an accident."

"Well, be it so," said the madman, who seemed to be in the mood of some precaution. The rope being fastened and attached to the recumbent climbing the rigging of the balloon with the agility of a squirrel and in a few moments was seated on the apex, clapping his hands and shouting with joy. All at once he takes out a large clasp-knife, and, brandishing it above his head, yells out: "Now, you rascal you wanted to descend, did you?" So you shall with a vengeance!" and, before M. Godard can utter a word, four out of the six remaining ropes carried the balloon up cut and the car itself swing violently outside. The madman's knife was now touching the other two, when the aeronaut calls out to him,

"Stop, one word!"

"No, no; down you go."

"But let me tell you something, my friend; we are now three thousand feet high, it is true, but that is not high enough for a thoroughly good fall."

"What do you mean?" asked the madman, confusedly.

"I mean this, that a fall of only three thousand feet might not kill me, and I prefer being killed to being only crippled. Oblige me, therefore, by waiting until we rise three or four thousand feet higher."

"Agreed!" said the madman, who seemed to enjoy the idea of so prodigious a fall.

The aeronaut keeps to his word; he throws out nearly the whole of his ballast, and the balloon shoots up rapidly. But while the madman is attentively watching this operation M. Godard observes that among the cordage as yet untouched is the pulley of the gas-escape. He gently draws it out, and the gas begins to escape. Immediately the balloon where the lunatic is perched. In a few moments the combined effects of the gas and the now intensely rarified air apparent, and the madman sinks in a state of lethargy. The aeronaut contrives to bring down his balloon, and the terrible crisis is ended.

A Lucky Mistake.

Among the steerage passengers who drifted over to New York from Havre, a little while ago was a young French girl named Louise Dumont.

Her destination was Newark, Delaware, where she had a distant female relative living in indigent circumstances, and, as she believed, the only surviving kin she had in the world.

By some mistake, owing to her disability to understand the English language, she took a train on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and got off at Newark, New Jersey.

When she was informed of her error, she bought a ticket to return to New York by the next train, but on account of a very remarkable occurrence she was induced to change her mind.

As the girl sat in the depot, downcast in spirits, alone in a strange land and almost penniless, visions of her home in "La Belle France" crossed her mind.

She thought of her mother who had recently died, of her only brother who fell with his father as they fought side by side at the terrible battle of Saalbruck, and as she mused upon her past joys and present friendless, she unconsciously toyed with a large gold locket that was suspended by a strong gold chain from her neck, while tears trickled down her cheeks.

She was a brunette of the loviest type, and her jet black, wavy hair was arranged with such exquisite taste that it made the broad, high forehead, expressive eyes, and graceful, full throat appear to the best advantage.

While Louise was abstractedly playing with her locket, there came into the depot a tall, handsome gentleman, about sixty years of age.

He had something of a military bearing, and his countenance indicated intelligence and refinement.

The girl's appearance immediately attracted his attention, and as he, too, was waiting for a train, he occupied the time in watching her.

As he walked leisurely to and fro in the ladies' room, he came near to where the girl was sitting just as she opened the locket and revealed a well known face, that was the exact counterpart of a picture that he had at home in his library.

It represented the Empress Josephine, the deceased wife of Napoleon Bonaparte.

The gentleman immediately asked the girl, in good French, where she obtained the picture.

She replied, with much simplicity:

"My mother gave it to me."

Requesting the favor of examining the locket, he took it in his hand, and with the greatest astonishment read the following:

"Josephine, to Hortense De Miratel, 1812."

"My mother was a Miratel," said he, scanning the beautiful French girl's features closely, "and," he added, as a light seemed to flash in upon his confused ideas, "she was a sister to Hortense De Miratel, who, for some act of faithfulness to the unhappy Josephine, received this locket and portrait as a reward. My good girl, who are you, anyhow?"

The child then related her story—how her father and brother had been killed in battle, and that her mother had recently died; that she had committed her to the care of the only relative that she believed to be living, at Newark, Delaware.

The gentleman then being satisfied that the girl was his own niece, disclosed his own name, Victor Provost. He had escaped from prison when a young man, having been incarcerated by the Bourbons about the time of the sojourn of Louis Napoleon in America.

He fled to this country and settled at Wilkesbarre, Pa., where he now lives in affluence, being interested in large coal and iron tracts in that locality. It is hardly necessary to state that the niece needed but little persuasion to accompany her uncle home.

The romance of our story is increased by the fact that Mr. Provost has a son, who is a very promising young man, and that he immediately became fascinated with his newly-found cousin. The old gentleman is in an ecstasy at the turn things have taken, and has resolved that his son shall marry the girl in a few weeks. Of course young provost has accepted this proposition with much joy, and orders for a magnificent bridal trosseau are now being filled by various parties in New York, for the fortunate girl who, but a short time ago, was a penniless steerage passenger in an emigrant ship.

What Mrs. Jenks has Proved.

1st—Mrs. Jenks proves that Weber was acting with Anderson in this business, and demanding a written guarantee, just as Anderson testified.

2d—That Anderson did not forget the Sherman letter, but received and used it in entire good faith.

3d—That Anderson and Weber did write a letter to John Sherman, in which they referred to the famous restaurant interview in which Mr. Sherman had made them a verbal guarantee.

That Anderson would have referred to to such assurances by Sherman in a letter the day after unless they had been given is really incredible. Thus, one by one the links of Anderson's original testimony are forged and riveted, not only by witnesses hostile to Sherman, but even by his own friends and partisans.—Charleston Journal of Commerce.

—The Bannock chiefs, whose outbreak has afforded Gen. Howard an opportunity to send more warlike telegraphic dispatches and to be in time to be too late for more skirmishes, complain that they were driven to hostilities by the lies, thefts, and outrages of their agent, Reinhart, who had made them work, promised them pay, and refused to keep his promises. He had starved them almost to death, and fled to them." Even the peaceable, root-digging Bannocks could not stand this, and they have joined the list of formerly friendly tribes whom a corrupt and fraudulent Indian policy has made bitterly hostile.

Accident.

Rev. H. P. Jordan, of the State Temperance Alliance, on last Friday evening sustained a fracture of the right arm near the wrist, by a fall. Mr. Jordan was walking toward his home, in West Baltimore, at the time. A child ran across the pavement in his way, and in the effort to keep from injuring the child Mr. Jordan fell.—*Balto. An inspection is all that is required to verify the above assertion. Call and see her, and you will surely purchase.

She would also state that she has secured the services of a lady from the city whose whole time has been spent in the Millinery business, and who, of course understands getting up a Bonnet or other job of Millinery in the most Fashionable city style. PERUVIAN SYRUP

From a Physician.

NORTH HYDE PARK, Vt., Feb. 7, 1878.

Messrs. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston, Mass:

Gentlemen—You may perhaps remember that I wrote you several weeks ago in regard to the use of the "Peruvian Syrup" for my wife, who was suffering from general debility, the sequence of Typhoid Dysentery. I had tried the most noted physicians in this State and also in Canada, without relief. At your recommendation she commenced the use of the Syrup. The first four bottles made but little impression, but while taking the fifth, she began to improve rapidly, and now, after using six of the dollar bottles she regained her strength, and is able to do most of the work about the house; and I feel that I cannot speak too highly in praise of Peruvian Syrup. I have prescribed it to several of my patients, and have procured the sale of several dozen of it here. You can make any use of this letter that you see fit. Yours very truly,

H. D. BELDEN, M. D.

From Rev. John Gregory,

Pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Pittston, Luzerne County, Pa.

My Dear Sir—Having at various times, personally, and in my own and other families, tested the great value of the medicine called Peruvian Syrup, or Protected Sollution of Protoxide of Iron, I most cheerfully recommend it, especially to those who are suffering from dyspeptic and nervous disorders. As a reliable and powerful alterative, it is, I think, unsurpassed; and as a tonic, free from all the objectionable features of alcoholic remedies, it is a most efficient auxiliary to the temperance cause. One of the greatest hindrances to the temperance reform at present is as I think, the medical use of alcoholic stimulants. Whatever may be urged as to their necessity in certain cases, we have in the Peruvian Syrup, a safe and efficient substitute for those dangerous remedies. This testimony is given unsolicited, with the hope that some who are not yet acquainted with the valuable properties of the medicine may be induced to give it a trial. Yours truly, JOHN GREGORY.

Manhood: How Lost, How Restored!

Just published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure, without medicine, of Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc; also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demodstrates, from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
