CHILD SONGS.

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

THE CITY CHILD

Dainty little maiden, whither would you wander?
Whither from this pretty house, this house where mother dwells?
"Far and far away," said the dainty little maiden,
"All among the gardens, auriculas, anemones,
Roses and lilies and Canterbury bells."

Dainty little maiden, whither would you wander?
Whither from this pretty house, this city house of ours?
"Far and far away," said the dainty little maiden,
"All among the meadows, the clover and the clouds."

MINNIE AND WINNIE.

Minnie and Winnie
Slept in a shell.
Sleep little babies!
And they slept well.

Pink was the shell within,
Silver without;
Sounds of the great sea
Wandered about.

Sleep, little ladies!
Wake not soon!
Echo on echo
Dies to the moon.

Two bright stars
Peep'd into the shell.
"What are they dreaming of?
Who can tell?"

Started a green linnet
Out of the croft;
Wake, little ladies,
The sun is aloft!

MY CHARLEY.

HOW HIS WOOING ENDED.

My Charlie was the most unromantic and matter-of-fact fellow that ever existed. He would read an old almanac any time in preference to a volumne of poems, and when I told him one day about the trials and sufferings of that dear "Claude Clonett," in Stringemout's new novel, he coolly asked me, when I had finished, if "C. C, took sugar or drank his whiskey straight." Oh, my! what a trouble he was to me, and I really do not know how I ever came to tolerate him. He wouldn't act one bit like a hero, and when he said "good bye" at the gate, after spending the evening with me, he would walk straight away through the field whistling "Yankee Doodle," and never turn and kiss his hand to me once.

Then when I flirted just a little with a nice fellow to make my Charlie jealous he never said one word, and I had expected he would vow vengeance on the nice fellow, and threaten to take prussic acid himself.

No, there was no romance in Charlie Marsh. He drank two cups of coffee for breakfast, ate lots of pork and beans for dinner, and poured down three cups of tea for supper. His hair was always parted on the right side of his head, a mustache never graced his lip, and his voice, instead of being soft and low and sweet, was loud and course like the sound of a bass viol.

It will be proper to state, before I go any further, that Charlie was my promised husband; and I think he loved me, although he was unromantic. As I said before, how I came to love him has always been a profound mystery to me, for he was so different from my ideal as night is from day; and when he proposed to me, in place of dropping on his knees and telling me that I was the whole world to him and he could never, never, never exist one moment without me for his guiding star, he just turned to me one evening, as we were sitting together in the parlor, and said, as coolly as you please: "Sis"—that's what he always called me—"you know I have been head over heels in love with you for more than two months; won't you be Mrs. Marsh, and make a fellow happy?"

"Head over heels in love" with me! what an expression! I was really shocked, and I never ought to have said "Yes" but I took pity on the poor fellow, because I thought he sincerely loved me, and would become more sensible in time. I do not think I would have loved him so well if Pa had not detested him. Pa did not like him, because it was rumored that his great-grandfather sold peanuts on a Camden ferryboat; but I never believed it. Pa at last forbad him the house; but that made me all the more anxious to see my Charley, and we met under the great maple trees. He, of course, should have proposed an elopement; but he was too matter-of-fact to ever think of it; and when I asked him what we had better do under the circumstances, he thought for a few moments and said:

"I think I'll give your father a good thrashing when I catch him out, and then he will think better of me."

"No, Mr. Marsh," I replied, "you'll do no such thing. Just lay your finder on Pa, and I'll never speak to you again while I live."

I said this in such a tragic manner that poor Charley could do nothing but stand and look at me, and whistle.

"What shall we do, then?" he asked.

"Why, if you are too dumb to think, I will tell you," I answered, feeling dreadfully provoked at him. "To-night, when pale Luna has—"

"What's that?" he asked.

"The moon," I returned, impatiently; "and you will oblige me by not interrupting me again. When pale Luna has sunk to rest behind the horizon, and our cottage is hushed in silence, come stealthily to the back yard, and—"

"That confounded dog will get after me!"

"Mr. Marsh," I returned, getting entirely out of patience, "if you interrupt me once more, I will leave you, and return to my home." "Go on, then, Sis," he replied, "and I'll be as silent as a tombstone. Proceed, as Parson Sagby says."

"Well," I continued, "when you reach the back yard be sure that no one is upsee that the house is shrouded in darkness—and if it is, throw a little gravel stone against my window, and I will appear to you like Juliet did to Romeo—"

"But where will that dog be—"

"Silence!" I said; "I will see that the dog is shut up in the kitchen—Don't interrupt me again, please. I will be all in readiness to leave my father's mansion, and you must stand beneath my window and catch me, for I will have to jump down—"

"Suppose you should fall and skin your nose?" said he.

I could not stand that. All patience was gone, and I commenced to sob hysterically.

"Don't cry, Sis," he said, tenderly, taking me in his arms. "I'll see that you do not fall. Tell me the rest of the programme, and I'll listen in silence."

I then ceased sobbing, and resumed:

"After we are safely away from the grasp of my cruel Pa, I will become your own wife forever; and then we will return to him, fall on our knees and ask forgiveness. Do you like my plan, dear?"

"All right, Sis; your arrangement is A No. 1. I will do exactly as you say.—When pale what-you-may-call-it has sunk to rest, a chap of my inches will be about."

"That's a dear, Charley," I replied; "you'll try and be good hereafter, and have a soul above buttons, won't you? And now I must return home. Tra-la-la till to-night." And, kissing my hand to him, I turned and walked home.

It was awfully dark. Murky, sombre clouds floated through the sky, and hid pale Luna completely from view. I had everything in readiness to leave my father's house; and I sat by the window of my cosy chamber awaiting the sound of the gravel stone against the pane. It came at last, with a sharp crack that made me half jump from my chair, and silently I slid the sash up as high as it would go.

"Are you there, dear Charley?" I asked in a low voice.

"Yes," was the reply, and his head appeared on a level with the window-sill. "I got on this hogshead, and now I can lift you out easily. Is that dog shut up safely?"

"He is, I replied, "and now help me out. Be careful. That hogshead is full of water, and the cover is weak—O, gracious!"

My admonition came too late. Our combined weight was too much for the cover—it gave way, and in we both went up to our necks in water.

"Just as I expected," said Charley, climbing out.

"You're a brute!" I returned. "Lift me out of this."

He did so, and at the very moment I was deposited on the ground, Pa and the dog Towser, appeared on the scene.

"There's that dog!" cried my lover, and he disappeared over the garden fence in a twinkling.

"What means this?" asked my cruel father.

I made no reply; but pushing past him; I entered the house, ran up to my room, and had a nice long cry. I would never see Charley again, and he married a widow with five children. Poor fellow! I pity him!

"The Disadvantages of City Boys."

Some months ago, Rev. Washington Gladden, of Springfield, Mass., believing that if he could find out how the active and prominent men of his own city spent their boyhood, it would help to solve the problem of what is the best training for boys, prepared the following circular, which was sent to the one hundred men who could fairly be said to stand at the head of the financial, commercial, professional and educational interests of the city.

"MY DEAR SIR:—I desire to find out, for the benefit of the boys, how the leading men of this city spent their boyhood. Will you be kind enough to tell me

"1. Whether your home during the first fifteen years of your life was on a farm, in a village, or in a city, and,

"2. Whether you were accustomed, during any part of that period, to engage in any kind of work when you were not in school?

"I should be glad, of course, to have you go into particulars as fully as you are disposed to do; but I do not wish to tax your patience, and I shall be greatly obliged for a simple answer to these two questions."

No less than eighty-eight of the busy gentlemen who received this circular were kind enough to answer the questions,—some of them briefly, most of them quite fully, and it turned out that few had been brought up like most of the bops who crowd the ball-grounds and fill the streets of our cities in these later days. Here is a brief summary of the returns:

Of these eighty-eight men, twelve spent the first fifteen years of their life in the city, twelve in villages, and sixty-four were farmers' boys.

But of the twenty-four who lived in villages and cities, six were practically farmers' boys, for they lived in small villages, or on the outskirts of cities, and had the same kind of work to do that farmers' boys have. One of these village boys said:

"I learned to hoe, dig and mow; in fact, I was obliged to work, whether I liked it or no. In winter I went to school, and worked nights and mornings for my board."

Another said: "I used to work away from home some on a farm in the summer and fall. In the winter, when going to school, we three boys used to work up the wood for winter use."

Four others told substantially the same story. As they were about the same as farmers' boys, we may add them to that list, so that seventy out of eighty-eight,—almost four-fifths of all these men,—had the training of farm-life.

Now how was it with the eighteen city and village boys on the list? Did they have an easy time of it? Five of them did, as they testify; five of them had no work in particular to do, but one of the five says that he studied law when out of school, and that was not exactly play. The rest of the eighteen were poor boys,—not paupers by any means, but children of the humbler classes, many of them in narrow and needy circumstances,—and though they lived in cities or villages, they were accustomed from their earliest years to hard work.

"Was generally employed," says one, "during the summer months, and in vacations, in doing any kind of work that offered."

Four of the city boys were newsboys. One of them says: "The last year I was connected with the press, I earned one hundred dollars before breakfast."

Another: "I have paid my own way since eight years of age, without any assistance except my board from my eighth to my eleventh year."

Of all these eighty-eight boys, five only had nothing particular to do.

While these boys were growing and working, a great many others,—sons of merchants and lawyers,—were growing up in Springfield, going to school and amusing themselves, as boys of their class are apt to do. Where are they? Only five of this class are heard from among the eighty-eight solid men of that city. Some of them, perhaps, are prosperous men in other cities, but the number cannot be large, for in Springfield only five men out of eighty-eight came from this class. Ninety-four and a half per cent. were either farmers' boys or poor and hard-working town-boys.

Mr. Gladden made his report to the public of Springfield, in the form of a lecture. The mere announcement of the subject alone crowded the church, which is a large one, and the interest in the lecture was so great that the Mayor and several of the representative citizens requested a repetition in the Music Hall. When this came off, the hall was packed and hundreds went away from the doors unable to gain entrance.

Mr. Gladden has rewritten the lecture, and his interesting facts and logical deductions will appear in one of the leading magazines for March. He is now engaged on a "Talk with Girls" for the same magazine. It will be printed before long, and will be of vital interest to the girls, and suited to their requirements, as this paper is suited to the boys.

And Undertaker,

Would announce to the public that I am occupying as Ware Room my Dwelling House, next to the scene of the late fire. Having laid in new stock, I am now prepared to serve my customers and the public with anything in my line, and hope that none will think that because I have suffered so severely by the late disastrous fire, that I will not be able to serve them. My house is large and roomy, and I shall keep it filled with Furniture of the best kind, which I shall sell at the lowest price, and defy competition in price and quality. I am very grateful to a generous public for their very liberal patronage in the past, and as I have to almost start anew in a business life, I beg that they will continue that generous patronage, that I may, to some extent, recover my almost ruinous loss by the late fire. I guarantee to always give satisfaction. Repairing promptly and neatly done. Picture frames always on hand and made to
