Physiological Effects of Alcohol.

Upon returning to his home in Cleveland a few days ago Dr. Tanner delivered a lecture on the physiological effects of alcohol; and while it may be said that he advanced nothing not already known to medical science, yet it cannot be denied that he interested his audience far more than the ordinary temperance speaker does, on account of the common-sense view he took, and he impressed his listeners by the force of his arguments in favor of temperance. Out of twenty-eight years' practice of medicine he had followed the usual custom of physicians and prescribed alcohol for eleven years, at the expiration of which time he turned his attention to discovering a substitute for it, and claims that as small a piece of beef as could be held on the point of a knife contains as much nutriment as a couple of gallons of Bavarian beer. He denied that alcoholic liquors are conservators of strength, and remarked that many physicians had formed this opinion, based upon the view taken by Liebig, the eminent German chemist, who at one time claimed that alcohol unites with the oxygen of the system and serves as food. An examination, however, by distinguished physicians disclosed the fact that all the elements of alcohol consumed will be found separated in the blood. One paper, read before the Royal Society of Physicians and Surgeons of London, proved that the use of brandy and whiskey as a stimulant robs the system of a great portion of its oxygen, which is essentially a food gas, changing, as it does, the venous to arterial blood, which supplies the system with sustenance. It also leaves a large amount of carbonic acid gas in the system, by reason of the imperfect action of the lungs, which is brought about by detracting from the supply of oxygen. Carbonic acid gas is poisonous, whether retained in the system by this means or inhaled. After this investigation Liebig modified his claims. The doctor disproved an assertion made by an English physician that alcohol was of value as a stimulant by pointing out that many persons had lived as long a time upon less or as much food without the use of alcohol. In referring to his long fast he expressed the belief that if he had taken alcohol he would have failed, and defied any one to produce an instance where a person had survived for such a length of time without food even though aided by alcoholic stimulants. "Alcohol," he further remarked, "calls into greater action the force of the system. In case it is given there is a recoil which follows in a depressive feeling, and the dose has to be repeated again and again, and the system must have an immense power of force to respond. Alcohol does not warm the body. The face is flushed, the eyes are bright, but the internal temperature is decreased. A blush on the face comes at the expense of some other part of the body. There is a certain amount of heat in the system. Flushing of the surface by use of stimulants takes heat from the interior parts. A hornet's nest rightly stirred up is just as good for the purpose as alcohol, but is never prescribed." Dr. Tanner's view's are evidently correct, and should attract more attention than they probably will. He did not consider the thousand and one evils that almost always follow in the wake of intemperance, but discusses the subject from a purely scientific point of view, and by pointing out the physiological affects of the constant use of alcoholic liquors clearly demonstrates that their use is detrimental to health.—Balto. Gazette.

GULLS: They were watching the seagulls whirling in graceful circles above the waters of the bay, while the rays of the sinking sun covered the landscape with a flood of gold. Finally he turned to her, and in a voice trembling with emotion, asked: "Darling, if we were sea-gulls would you fly away with me and be at rest?" To which she answered, with her gaze fixed on a far-off mass of castellated clouds: "No, George, I'd let you fly away, and then I'd have all the rest I wanted here."

MR. LINCOLN was asked which of two programmes for his inauguration he preferred. Throwing one leg over the back of his chair, he told "a story": "When I was practising law in Illinois, a client of mine, a peculiar sort of fellow, was brought before the court, and the judge asked him: 'Do you swear or affirm?' 'Mr. Judge,' my client replied, 'I don't care a d—n which.'"

"YES," said a Columbia girl at the show, "I know my beau goes out between the acts, but he is nice and never drinks anything but a cup of coffee, because I can always smell it as plain as day, and I know the smell of coffee from beer or whiskey, if I am a little bit green."

"You don't know how it pains me to punish you," said the teacher. "I guess there's the most pain at my end of the stick," replied the boy, feelingly. "At any rate, I'd be willing to swap places."—Boston Transcript.

A CARD.

To the Business Men & Legal Profession of Chestertown:

HAVING been reappointed CONSTABLE by lawful authority for my 3rd term for Queen Anne's county, and given good and sufficient bond for the faithful discharge of all the duties of the said office, I solicit a share of the business of Chestertown.

I promise to give my undivided attention to all business intrusted to me, and make prompt returns of all moneys collected by me. I will solicit for a reasonable commission or bring suit according to law as instructed.

Dogs.

The attachment felt by the majority of people for dogs is hardly to be wondered at. Dogs alone, of all the animal creation, forsake the society of their own species for the companionship of man. To be with his master is a dog's summum bonum of happiness. Their disinterested attachment and unswerving fidelity has been sung by poets from Homer to the American, who touchingly remarks:

"When fickle friends and fickler fortune fails,
Dogs, unfickle still, for you will wag their tails."

Nothing you do will alienate the affection of your faithful dog. Bill Sykes, ruffian as he is, can possess a true canine friend as well as the best of mankind. You may make shipwrecks of your worldly prospects and your faithful animal will cling to you, like the little dog of Mary, Queen of Scots, which was found nestling in her own gown after her execution. As a companion a dog is admirable. Every one who is given to sedentary pursuits ought to keep one. The necessity for giving exercise to his favorite would prove a most healthful practice for many a literary man. Miss Mitford has charmingly described the delights of a country walk with a dog as companion. The delight of the creature at getting out is pleasant to watch. If his master is disposed to conversation how thoroughly the animal will enter into his views, with what joyful alacrity he will dash after sticks and stones, returning with wild gambols and joyous barks. If, on the other hand, the master is engrossed in his own reflections, the dog has too fine a sense of good breeding to obtrude his attentions. He will find amusement for himself in hedgerows and ditches; poking his nose inquiringly amid heaps of dead leaves, dashing impotently after sparrows which he never comes within a yard of; all the while ready to rush back with joyful alacrity to his master's side thoroughly disengaged, and ready to enter into any scheme propounded to him. People who can keep dogs and do not certainly miss a great amount of real enjoyment.
