SATURDAY.....JULY 23, 1881.

PHYSIOLOGY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

DR. HAMMOND DENOUNCES THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION—DELETERIOUS EFFECTS OF IMPERFECT INFORMATION ON YOUTHFUL MINDS.

From the New York Herald.

"One of the evils of the present time is the superficial knowledge of things that people pick up," said Dr. Hammond yesterday, as he walked out of the University Medical College, to a Herald reporter who was waiting to get his views on certain points in popular education, "and not the least of these evils is teaching anatomy and physiology to boys and girls as part of a common school education."

"Why, Doctor?"

"It does a great deal of harm and scarcely any good."

"But surely, Doctor, anatomy and physiology are good things to know?"

"Yes, for those who have to apply them, but certainly not for infants, and, above all, not for girls."

"Well, doctor, that is rather a new idea, is it not?"

"By no means. It is one held by many physicians and others who have given attention to the subject, and there is scarcely a day that I do not see in my practice the deleterious results of giving a superficial insight into these sciences to young men and women."

"For instance?"

"In the first place the books used are necessarily mere outlines, and therefore give every imperfect view of the subjects to which they relate. Anatomy and physiology can only be properly taught by dissection and experiments under the direction of skilled teachers, such as we have in our medical colleges. Of course the pupils get no such instruction as this. They are given some one of the popular school books on these sciences to study, and then to recite to teachers as ignorant as they are themselves, for these teachers know nothing more than what they have got out of the same works, probably the day before. The consequence is that scarcely the shadow of anything worth knowing falls on the pupil's mind. The good that is done is nothing at all."

MORBID CURIOSITY THAT BRINGS NO DISEASE.

"But besides this negative result there is a positive one of more importance. The boy or the girl learns just enough to excite curiosity and apprehension—curiosity relative to matter of which it is better they should be instructed by parents instead of picking up knowledge in regard to them from all sorts of improper sources, and apprehension based on insufficient information of the existence of disease of the various organs of their bodies. A young lady scarcely fifteen years old gravely informed me a short time ago that she was sure her pancreas was diseased.

"My dear child," I exclaimed, "what do you know about your pancreas?"

"It's the organ, doctor, that emulsifies the fat. I am sure the fat I eat is not emulsified, and so I have stopped eating all kinds of fat things."

"Was she very stout?"

"She was as thin as a rail, and was actually half starving herself from a mistaken idea based on the little smattering of knowledge she had that her 'pancreas' was diseased. She had no symptom whatever of pancreatic diseases, and her emaciation was only the result of her morbid fancy.

"Actual disease is, however, often induced by the imagination excited by imperfect knowledge. The stomach, the liver, the heart, are thus peculiarly liable to be affected. It is even common with medical students when they begin to study anatomy and physiology to imagine they have diseases of the organs of which they read, and to which their attention is directed, and it is only after fuller information that they get rid of the abnormal notions. Sometimes actual disease is produced in them."

KEEP CHILDREN IN IGNORANCE.

"But, Doctor, you would not keep boys and girls in entire ignorance of the anatomy and physiology of their own bodies?"

"Yes, I would, except in regard to one of two matters, which they do not learn in school, and of which their fathers and mothers should impress them. As to telling them about the hearts and lungs and livers and spleens and pancreas and kidneys in the superficial way in which they are told about them in school, I would stop it altogether. Perhaps anatomy and physiology should be thoroughly taught in colleges to young men who have reached adult age, but young women should be taught nothing of the kind at any time. There are much more suitable things for them to learn. It does a woman harm to know where her liver is; for instance, I am sure that the large increase in diseases of the nervous system among women in recent years is to a great extent due to the pernicious system of calling their attention in school to organs that they had better know knothing about. I know that such attention deranges their health, mentally and physically."

Kill or Cure.

A physician being summoned to attend a miser's wife in her last illness, declined to continue his visits unless he had some legal guarantee for payment, as he knew by experience the slippery character of the husband where pecuniary obligations were concerned. The miser thereupon drew up a document, formally promising, after haggling over the amount, that he would pay to Dr. So-and-So the sum of ——, "if he cures my wife." "Stop!" said the doctor, "I cannot undertake to do that. I will treat her to the best of my ability; but she is very ill, and I fear she will not recover." So the sentence was altered to "For attendance upon my wife, kill or cure," the paper signed and delivered over to the physician. His skill was unavailing and the patient died; but when the bill came in the widower quietly repudiated the debt in toto. In vain it was represented to him that the doctor held his legal acknowledgment; so the latter sued him for the amount, in perfect confidence of gaining the day. The miser did not dispute the circumstances in court, but requested to see the document, which he then read aloud with great deliberation. "And did you cure my wife, sir?" he asked, glancing over his spectacles at the plaintiff. "No, that was impossible." "Did you kill her?" Verdict for the defendant. Doctor sold.—Chambers' Journal.

A DAINTY Washoe maiden of pleasant and respectable appearance was walking along one of the streets of Truckee, Nev., a few days since, when a half drunken man approached and attempted to caress her. The indignity was promptly resented and the intoxicated individual taught a lesson which will never be forgotten. The lady struck him fairly in the mouth with her clinched hand and knocked him sprawling on his back.

MONEY-EARNING WIVES.

It is frequently a subject for thought and conversation as to why professional women—actresses, milliners, dressmakers and principals of young ladies' academies, etc.—have so much trouble with their husbands; and it is also frequently observed that the husbands of money-earning ladies are idle or lazy, or both, or are dissipated, or else shrink into quiet nonentities who are apparently endured because of the feminine belief that it is good to have a man about the house anyhow.

It is certainly true that the husbands of money-earning women are the quietest and most unassuming of their sex—in their domestic life. To some this condition may appear a cause for merriment and ridicule, but in reality it involves the serious question as to whether it is good for a man to marry a woman who desires or will be forced to earn her share of their income in actual hard cash and not by staying at home and economizing in groceries, dry-goods, gas and fuel. A man who marries with this contingency staring him in the face risks a good deal concerning his domestic happiness. A woman who can contribute a share of money earned by her own labor to the common household fund is naturally prouder of it than a man would be, and, woman-like, she wants to crow over it a bit, and it frequently happens that this crowing becomes irksome and embarrassing to the man. His responsibilities as a man, a husband and a father are lessened, and with the burden that is lifted from his back goes something of his self-esteem, something of his self-respect and sturdy independence. His pride in himself and his self-assurance receive a blow. We know there are many worthless shirks, whose unmanly selfishness and lack of pluck have thrown the heavy burden of providing for the home upon the slender shoulders of their brave and patient wives. We know, too, how nobly a woman assumes such duties when they arise before her, and we know of her marvelous self-sacrifices and endurance, but these are not the money-earning wives we refer to. These generally marry with all the pretty dreams and hopes of wifehood that are natural to young wives, and then, when it is too late, they discover that it is the woman who must be strong and the wife who must provide.

Our original proposition is that a rightly proud man will do any sort of labor rather than have his wife work for him. Another and very strong moral reason why women whose husbands can and do support them should not seek "paid work," is that they may be taking work away from some woman that really needs it.—Chicago Tribune.

To speak well suppeses a habit of attention which shows itself in the thought; by language we learn to think, and above all to develop thought.

ACT well at the moment, and you have performed a good action to all eternity.

It requires a man of considerable push to earn his living with a wheelbarrow.
