Fertility Increased by Rotation.

When the farm annually yields to its full capacity, there is extracted from the soil that element that principally constitute its riches or fertility, and unless the soil is fed matter containing those elements of fertility, it will in the course of time fail to repay for the labor and capital required in its cultivation. Most farmers are aware of that fact, and use barnyard manure and commercial fertilizers in order to supply the deficiency. We have within our power, however, the means by which the soil can be recuperated and restored to fertility, and every prudent farmer takes advantage of such opportunities in order to bring his farm to the highest degree of productiveness. The practice of a rotation of crops is essential to good farming, and it is by such system that the most fertile sections have been kept to their standard condition.

How rotation accomplishes so desirable a result is not a hard matter to solve, for plants, like animals, differ in their methods of growth and feeding capacities. When a field is occupied by clover, the crop, when plowed under or fed to stock on the farm and again returned in the shape of manure, adds additional matter to the soil. When fed to animals, only a portion returns, but when the whole crop goes under the quantity is very large. But, as a crop of clover is sometimes too valuable for the plow, we still have the advantage of knowing that the sod and roots are very enriching. Clover is a lime and potash plant, requiring but little applied nitrogen to make its growth; and yet, by shading the soil, and through its power of utilizing the nitrogenous materials of the soil and atmosphere it returns more nitrogen to the soil than those crops that depend largely on that substance. Nor does it take from the soil a disproportionate quantity of phosphoric acid, which is another advantage in its favor. As clover takes from the soil lime and potash principally, it leaves the ground, when removed, in good condition for some crops that prefer nitrogen and phosphoric acid. Experience has taught farmers that wheat and corn are capable of filling a place in the rotation, and such system is general on well-cultivated farms, wheat, clover and corn following in successive order.

In some sections the practice is a full crop, that is, in addition to the use of the cultivator, the hoe is passed once through the cornfield, which more throughly eradicates weeds. It calls for more labor on the corn, but saves it on the weeds. The rotation is not, however, complete without a root crop of some kind, and this, joined with the hurdling of sheep, as is done in England, will bring an almost barren field in the course of a few years to a fertile condition. Our system of rotation is too narrow, and should take in other crops that are profitable, in order that the elements of plant food should be distributed as evenly as possible when removed by crops.

Another advantage in rotation is that all soils contain fertility to a certain degree. Even in the best of soils there are dormant or insoluble substance valuable in composition, and when they are not being appropriated by an occupying crop, are gradually being reduced and rendered soluble as plant food for the succeeding crop, and thus rotation not only prevents the loss of particular substance in excess, but converts locked up elements of the soil into free and assimilable matter. In this country no system of rotation is complete without clover; in England it must contain the cultivation of root crops or sheep pasturage. That we may learn a valuable lesson by combining both practices, it becomes the duty of every farmer to make experiments, even if only on small locations.—Philadelphia Reckord.

Arab Horse Maxims.

Let your colt be domesticated and live with you from his tenderest age, and when a horse he will be simple, docile, faithful and inured to hardship and fatigue

Do not beat your horses nor speak to them in a loud tone of voice; do not get angry with them, but kindly reprove their faults, they will do better thereafter, for they understand the languages of man and their meaning.

If you have a long day's journey before you spare your horse at the start; let him frequently walk to recover his wind. Continue this until he has sweated and dried three times, and you may ask him what ever you please, he will not leave you in difficulty.

Observe your horse when he is drinking at a brook. If in bringing down his head he remains square, without bending his limbs, he possesses sterling qualities, and all parts of his body are built symmetrically.

Four thing he must have broad—front, chest, loins and limbs; four things long—neck, chest, forearm and croup; four things short—pasterns, ears and tail.

Oxen the Poor Man's Team.

Mr. W. H. Pearce, Vasilburn, in the Matted Farmer, in respect to oxen on the farm, says: "In discarding the ox, have we done wisely? I fear not. It is eminently the poor man's team. The cost of raising a yoke of oxen is much less than it costs to raise a pair of horses. The outfit costs less, and the wear and tear are less, and then, too, we must not forget the 'increase by the strength (in labor) of the ox.' To a very large extent the horse is the supplanter of the ox as a farm laborer. The introduction of the mowing-machine and other appliances in farming operations, it is claimed, has necessitated the change. We do not believe that there is any valid reason for this. But with a 'three-cattle team'—a yoke of oxen and a horse—the farmer can accomplish work as well, and with much greater economy. The horse requires more and better feed than the ox, and while the ox is constantly increasing in value, the horse is as constantly decreasing. It is the firm belief of not a few observing men that we here in Maine have already arrived at a condition of things that a change in this respect is needed, and a return made to the better and more economic methods of our fathers."

"I am the Last of Six."

One rainy forenoon, something less than a year ago, a pale, cadaverous youth walked into the store of D. N. Crittenton, New York, and in a weak, hoarse tone, interrupted frequently by a dry hacking cough, stated that he wanted a couple of bottles of HALE'S HONEY OF HOREHOUND AND TAR. "I am the last of six," he said; "the others all died of consumption, and I am going fast. I will try this new remedy, but I have no hope." He did try it, and to some purpose. He took in all twelve bottles, and is to-day in perfect health. Lungs sound, cough gone, not a sign of pulmonary disease remaining. Sold by druggists.

Mechanical.

THE

HANCOCK INSPIRATOR

THE BEST FEEDER KNOWN,

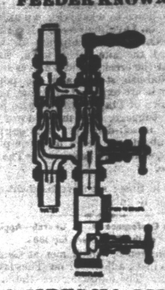
—FOR—

Stationary, Marine & Portable Boilers.

Has No Rival For Pumping Purposes

IS SIMPLE, RELIABLE AND ALWAYS IN ORDER.

CONSUMES LESS STEAM THAN ANY OTHER BOILER FEEDER KNOWN.



REQUIRES NO OILING

They will lift water 25 feet, and deliver to boiler at comparatively High or Low Pressure, as desired. No adjustment required for varying steam pressures. Has no movable parts to get out of order.

One important advantage of the Inspirator over a pump is that all the steam required to operate it is condensed in the water, thereby heating it and returning it all into the boiler, and enabling us to feed hot water to the boiler without the use of a heater (although a heater can be used with the Inspirator as well as with a pump). The Inspirator requires no repairs, no oiling, and is noiseless in its operation, whereas a pump requires repairs, it has to be oiled, is usually noisy, and all the steam used in operation is wasted. The only loss of steam by using the Inspirator is by radiation from the pipes, and this is no greater with the Inspirator than with the pump.
