POETRY.

AN EVENING SONG.

The weary day is ended,
The evening song is sung,
Fast fall the drowsing shadows,
The Sabbath day is done.

Some little seed I've scattered
Along the rugged way,
Lord, give it gracious fruitage
Ere come the reaping day.

When I perchance am sleeping
The quiet, pulseless sleep
Of those who rest in Jesus,
Secure, that He will keep,

Night spreads its sombre mantle,
Tired I sink to rest;
Keep me till morning dawneth,
Or—well, Thou knowest best!

AGRICULTURAL.

Stable Ventilation.

Many owners of stock seem to be as afraid of fresh air as a church sexton. When cold weather comes, they barricade their stables as closely as possible against the outer air, and having by this means secured warmth, believe they have made their stock safe and comfortable. This is a serious error. Cattle and horses require fresh air as much as human beings do, and the same evil results follow in their case as in that of men and women shut in a confined atmosphere which has been breathed over and over till changed into a fetid poison. Under prolonged exposure to such a poisoned air, delicate animals soon become debilitated and constitutional tendencies to disease are liable to be developed which might have remained latent or have been outlived under more favorable conditions. Even strong, healthy cattle lose vitality in a close, unventilated stable. It is the part of economy, therefore, to provide suitable ventilation for the stable; and in doing so it should be remembered that not only the consumption of air by the confined animals—equal to about 4,000 gallons for a full grown beast during every twenty four hours—but the exhalations from their excrement must be taken into the account. Nor must it be forgotten that while an abundance of fresh air is essential to health, warmth is equally so. The problem is to secure thorough ventilation without unduly lowering the temperature. Especially should draughts about the feet, as through cracks in floor communicating with the outer be carefully guarded against. All this involves expense; but the outlay for healthy winter quarters for live stock is soon recovered. The food given does its work better; the stock fatten more rapidly and in better condition, and so sell for a higher price at less cost for production; work animals are stronger and more enduring, and hence do better service on the same expenditure for food and care; and the loss from disease, as carefully conducted experiments prove, is very greatly reduced. The stable need not be a palace; but its arrangements for securing warmth and fresh air should be as complete in their degree, as those of a human habitation—a good deal more complete, indeed, than most people seem to think essential.

How to Take Care of Harness.

A harness that has been on a horse's back several hours in hot or rainy weather become wet, and if not properly cleaned, the damage to the leather is irreparable. If after being taken from the horse in this condition, it is hung up in a careless manner, traces and reins twisted into knots, and the saddle and bridle hung askew, the leather when dried retains the shape given it when wet, and when forced into its original form, damage is done to the stitching and the leather. The first point to be observed is to keep the leather soft and pliable. This can be done only by keeping it well charged with oil and grease; water is a destroyer of these, but mud and the saline moisture from the animal are even more destructive. Mud, in drying, absorbs the grease and opens the pores of the leather, making it a prey to water, while the salty character of the perspiration from the animal injures the leather, stitchings and mountings. It therefore follows that to preserve a harness the straps should be washed and oiled whenever it has been moistened by sweat or soiled by mud. It a harness is thoroughly cleaned twice a year, and when unduly exposed treated as we have recommended, the leather will retain its softness and strength for many years.

In selecting the brood mare, if trotting colts are desired, let it be one that paces. This is a secret with some breedes, and they carefully take advantage of it. A pacing mare always throws a trotter, no matter how she is bred. Many stallions become famous through the merits of their offspring, when the facts are that the mare imparts the qualities more strongly than the sire, under certain conditions. A thoroughbred sire will give fineness of bone, form, courage and endurance to the colt, but unless the dam be of the quality that "nicks" with the sire, the colt will be nothing remarkable.

If the bees have the brood chamber quite well filled, you can very easily make them go to work above, by simply smoking them, and cause the bees to fill themselves with liquid sweet, and continue to smoke them until they ascend into the surplus honey chamber above, where they will soon disgorge themselves and go to work.

Take care of the trees after they are planted.

An Awful Responsibility.

EVERYBODY has something to say about consumption. We all deplore its terrible ravages, but only a few of us seem to have enough common sense to take the proper means of preventing it. It is as simple as "two and two are four," that HALE'S HONEY OF HOREHOUND AND TAR, taken as a remedy for coughs, colds, difficult breathing, hoarseness, or any of the symptoms which pave the way for that terrible destroyer, will effect a radical cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Whoever, under these circumstances, neglects to resort to the true specific, assumes a fearful responsibility. Of druggists.
