CHESTERTOWN:
SATURDAY MORNING.....JULY 8, 1882.

Mr. Cruikshank's Fitness for the Judgeship.

From the Cecil Whig.

MR. EDITOR:—I confess that I do not recognize in Mr. Cruikshank the necessary fitness for the position he now aspires to. The Whig's objections, have only extended to the methods by which he seeks the judicial nomination. Mine go farther. Mr. Cruikshank has been at the Elkton bar about twenty years, and although during this time, I have been frequently in attendance upon the sittings of the Circuit Court, I have never yet heard him try a single case.

I do not believe that he has since his admission to the bar, tried half a dozen civil cases. Granting him as an editor all the ability that his most pronounced friends claim for him, yet upon what logical grounds, or by what process of reasoning, does it necessarily follow, that he would prove a capable Judge? If outside his professional work as an editor, he has had the time, the industry, and the application, to acquire a suitable knowledge of law, to fit him for a position upon the bench, what opportunity has he ever given the people of Cecil county, to judge of his acquirements as a lawyer? What means have the people of judging of his ability, except by the frequency of his appearance as counsel before the court, and the recognition of the reputation, that he must necessarily establish in the courts, as a lawyer of ability or of mediocrity? Has Mr. Cruikshank in fact ever made any reputation either high or otherwise, in Cecil, or in either of the other counties composing the judicial district as a practitioner? What case has he ever conducted in court that brought him into popular notice? Will some one of his friends please tell us? Now we were told a few days ago in an article written in his interest by a reporter of the Baltimore Day,—the writer of that article having been introduced in Elkton to Mr. Cruikshank's own law partner, Mr. John S. Wirt,—that the former had an extensive practice. That although he had not attained any special prominence as an advocate in the courts, yet he was of an exceedly judicial turn of mind, and giving us to infer that he had not made much reputation at the bar simply because the work of an advocate was distasteful to him. But we are not by any means prepared to accept the inference that this obliging reporter would have us accept, not even to please Mr. Wirt, who does not by the way seem to have at all appreciated the unprofessional act he committed, in being accessory before the fact, to a newspaper "puff" of his senior partner. We are asked to believe, however, that Mr. Cruikshank's lack of reputation at the bar, is solely due to the lack of desire on his part for such reputation. That it is not the capacity he lacks, but simply the ambition. The case, it seems, is just the reverse of the judgeship, where he has the ambition but lacks the capacity. We do not accept any such views of Mr. Cruikshank's personal admirers. That he is a man of unusual indolence, any one who knows him, will, if he respects the truth, unhesitatingly confess.

That he is constitutionally averse to regularly recurring mental or professional work. That whatever capacity he may possess, upon which to predicate his success as a lawyer, has been dwarfed by his stronger impulse of mental repose, and the desultory habit of study and reading common to all professional men of self-indulgence in this respect.

"Industrious labor wins by slow degrees;
True sons of Coke, are never men of ease."

It would be unprofitable hair-splitting to undertake to distinguish between two cases, in one of which, a man who really possessed ability but was too indolent mentally to apply it in his profession, and another case where a lawyer made no reputation, simply for lack of ability to make it. The result being the same in either case, it would matter but little which horn of the dilemma we take in accounting for the fact. So in the case of Mr. Cruikshank. He has not made any reputation as a lawyer, after twenty years standing at the bar, and that is all we assert. Be the cause lack of ability, or lack of application, certain it is, the lack of reputation argues a lack of one or the other. Now we regard these two qualifications as very essential ones in a claimant for judicial honors. Have not the people the right to ask whether Mr. Cruikshank possesses them, and what the evidences upon which he predicates their possession? He has no personal claim upon the position. Nor has any other man. Therefore Mr. Cruikshank has no right to attribute to the malevolence of his enemies a decent and proper inquiry, as to his personal qualifications for the important position he seeks.

It is true, he is asking a nomination for the judgeship at the hands of the Democratic voters of the District. Should he be nominated and elected however, by the Democrats, it is very clear that in the administration of the duties of his position, Republicans as well as Democrats, will alike have property and personal interests. Therefore neither Mr. Cruikshank nor any other man, can fortify himself behind a partisan bulwark, and shut out discussion as to his personal fitness for an office in which everybody is alike concerned. The case of a judge is materially different from that of a member of Congress, Delegate to the Legislature, or some such representative position, in which the individual chosen, is selected as the personal exponent of some political principle, policy or doctrine, supposed to be in direct opposition to those held by some other man over whom he is chosen. He is properly supposed to reflect the principles, to advocate the policy held by the majority whose vote he has received. To a certain extent, but in these latter days to an unjustifiable length, he is a partisan, and amenable only to the political party that elect him. Not so, however, in the case of judge. Although elevated by party he is amenable not merely to a party, but to the whole people. This being the case, they have the right to know whether or not the man nominated is the best man for the position. They do not consider any possible personal claim that a man may have for such a nomination. An individual seeking such a nomination may make such claims upon partisans, because his claim may be solely that of a partisan. Such and such only it seems to me is Mr. Cruikshank's claim. I do not recognize it as a legal one, and I believe that the best evidence of the partisan character of it lies in the fact that he urges it himself, and in his own behalf. It does not come from the people, not even the rank and file of his own party. It lacks spontaneity. Popular sentiment generally points to the man whose personal fitness for such a position is conspicuous. Mr. Cruikshank's personal fitness for the judgeship is not only not conspicuous, but its very existence is doubtful. His friends are too anxious by half to persuade people that he is fit. Their very zeal in his behalf suggests the suspicion that they doubt it themselves. Beside the manner in which it was sprung upon his party, long weeks in advance of the time when the people would be called upon to make their choice, indicates nearly, that his candidacy is not the result of popular demand, but of individual work, and those individuals—himself and another.

A NON-PARTISAN.

CONVERSION OF GOV. BLACKBURN—The Effect of Evangelist Barnes' Labors in Kentucky's Capital.—About six weeks since Barnes, the evangelist, declared his intention of making a grand assault upon the State capital of Kentucky and capturing for the army of the Lord the members of State Government. He has only been in Frankfort about two weeks, and his success is wonderful. Fully one thousand converts have been made by his powerful and eloquent appeals. While the Governor of Kentucky is known as a big-hearted and kindly man, yet he has always been considered a worldly person, so when it was announced last week that he had surrendered to Brother Barnes, there was much surprise among his club friends in this city and throughout the Bourbon districts. It appears that after an eloquent sermon, preached from the twenty-second chapter of the First Chronicles concerning the building of Solomon's temple, Mr. Barnes invited all who wished to confess Christ to come to the front. A few minutes after, among the throng could be seen the gray-haired head of the Governor of Kentucky moving towards the evangelist, who stood with outstretched hand to receive the penitents. Grasping the hand of Brother Barnes, Gov. Blackburn with his whole frame quivering with emotion, took his seat on the front row of chairs set apart for the penitents, and there made his first public confession of his Saviour.

THE Delawarean says that the exact gains of the Conference Academy festival cannot be given until the strawberry account is settled. It is safe to put the gains above $200. It was a delightful affair, and much praise is due to those who, with services and supplies, so kindly and efficiently helped forward the enterprise. The money will be judiciously expended in beautifying the grounds.

FOUR colored men have been appointed letter carriers by Postmaster Adreon in Baltimore.

"HOW DO YOU MANAGE," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus keep myself and family in good health and spirits.—See adv.

NOTICE.
To all delinquent TAX-PAYERS, of the Fourth District. Are you aware that my term of office as Collector has nearly expired, and you have not settled your taxes, which have long, long since been due? Now I have been as lenient with you as I possibly can be, and it is unreasonable for you to ask further indulgence as you well know there are levies against me, (which are being demanded of me,) and I cannot pay them unless you pay me your taxes. You have all been notified several times, and you well know it is my lawful duty to collect these taxes, and I do not want to resort to advertising your property, but if you will persist in not paying them you must take the responsibility and consequences yourselves. This is the last notice, so govern yourselves accordingly.
Respectfully, JOHN N. DODD,
