Ducks And Geese Flocking Into State

Cold weather has materially increased the supply of ducks and geese in Maryland waters, E. Lee LeCompte, State Game Warden, said recently.

The Game Division's patrol boats have reported, he said, that since the advent of more severe weather large flocks of ducks and geese have been winging southward to the Chesapeake Bay area.

These increases were noted particularly at Hollins Straits, Barren Island Bar and at the head of the Honga, all on the Eastern Shore. The additional supplies, said LeCompte, should insure the hunters an unusually successful season this year.

We will haul away for you any dead horses, cows or any other animals, if you notify us as soon as they die.

Farmers Adopt Soil Erosion Control Ideas

Farmers in the demonstration and camp work areas of the Soil Conservation Service in Maryland are rapidly accepting strip cropping on the contour as a measure for erosion control, according to O. C. Bruce, state coordinator for the Service in this State. Much of the success of strip cropping, he states, is due to the fact that it works into the ruglar rotations and that its advantages in saving soil and preventing losses are evident to the farmer during the first year it is put into effect. The water conservation which it brings about is an important factor also on Maryland farms.

M. Bruce says that 471 acres have been actually strip cropped in the camp work areas in Maryland and 1,054 acres are under agreement for strip cropping. These areas are located at Boonsboro, Harwood and White Hall. The Maryland project office at Hagerstown also reports considerable progress in contour strip cropping, with 60 acres in the project demonstration area actually strip cropped and 531 acres agreed to be treated in that way.

Contour strip cropping in Maryland, Mr. Bruce explains, merely means planting erosion inter-tilled crops in narrow strips around the level of the hill or "on the contour," as the Service men say. On either side of these inter-tilled crops, narrow strips of an erosion resisting crop, like hay, are planted. The latter slow up the water and filter out any soil which has come from the cultivated strips, while the furrows in the cultivated strips act as dams abreast the slope to catch the rain water and prevent washing.
