Didn't Like the Perfume.

George Waring and Arthur Blavering, two clerks in a down-town store, are rivals for the hand and heart of a girl who lives on Indiana avenue. Coming to Chicago together from the same country town, boarding at the same house and working for the same employer, their friendship was regarded as a lasting one. The object of the affection poured out by the young men was treated both impartially, receiving Waring Monday and Saturday evenings and Clavering Sunday and Wednesday. Last Wednesday Clavering escorted the young lady—her first name is Clara—to the theater. The play and the petit souper afterward softened Miss Clara's heart so that she treated the young man with more than usual kindness. When Clavering left his room next morning it was with the firm determination of testing his fate that same night by proposing to Clara. Waring noticed his changed demeanor and became suspicious. He believed in the doctrine of "first come first served" and was afraid that his fellow [illegible] proposal would be accepted. After [illegible] careful study, however, he laid [illegible] prevent any such catastrophe. [illegible] something that smells bad," [illegible] truggist of his acquaintance, [illegible] a joke on a friend of mine." [illegible] smiled and handed Waring [illegible] asafetida.

[illegible] that evening Clavering [illegible] Indiana avenue whist- [illegible] he arrived in front of the [illegible] Clara resided he met [illegible] said the latter. "Go- [illegible], eh? Well, I thought of [illegible] out as you got here first I [illegible] me a cigarette and I'll go [illegible]

[illegible] sed his friend a package of [illegible] Waring fumbled with [illegible] few minutes, and when he [illegible] contained half an ounce of [illegible] addition to the tobacco.

[illegible] er, unconscious of the plot, ran [illegible] up the steps, rang the bell and was [illegible] into the parlor, where Miss Clara [illegible] cozily ensconced in an easy chair. As [illegible] he entered the room he detected a peculiar odor, but ascribed it to the contribution which a south wind sends from Bridgeport.

"Miss Clara," said he, plunging at once into the matter nearest his heart, "you must known my feelings toward you. I—

Miss Clara moved her chair away and put her handkerchief to her face.

Arthur thought that Bridgeport was rather outdoing herself, but was too much in earnest to allow his thoughts to dwell upon such an unromantic thing as a stock yard's odor.

"Dearest, don't cry," he continued.—"Clara, I love you. Let me wipe away your tears."

Clavering nervously drew his handkerchief from his pocket. With it came the cigaretts and asafœdita, which sifted down an open register. The stench was horrible.

Five minutes later the unsucessful wooer walked slowly down Indiana avenue in deep meditation.

An hour later Waring was minus a tooth and was unable to see out of his left eye. In all probability he would have been minus more teeth and the sight in his other eye had it not been for the interference of an officer.

"I got even with them," said Clavering to Justice Lyon in the armory police court yesterday morning, after explaining the circumstance which led up to the assult, "and I'm willing to pay for it."

"I admit that you had great provocation," remarked the justice, "but I'll bind you both to keep the peace in $200 bonds."—Chicago News.

Good School Luncheons.

Nowadays, since superintendents and teachers have begun to realize that to secure the best mental work the best physical conditions are necessary, a great deal more attention is paid to warming and ventilating and lighting school-houses, and all that sort of thing, than formerly, but the doctor says that nine out of every ten cases of illness among school children, aside from the contagious ailments common to youth, are due to school luncheons. It isn't so much the cold dinner, either, but the kind of food that is taken. I have often thought what a nice plan it would be if some good "homely" woman would undertake to supply hot dinners for children who attend school near her own home; I am sure it would be a paying plan, too, for no parent would hesitate to pay a reasonable price for the privilege of seating his child or children at a good, wholesome, hot dinner, instead of cold lunch on a school desk. I always aim to give my children a change every day, and I most rigidly eschew pie and cake, except on rare occasions. A sandwich is nearly always acceptable, but the form of it should be varied as much as possible. In any case, however, the slices of bread should be cut smooth and thin, and the meat the same way. I like best to use chopped meats, moistened with a little stock, melted, buttered or scalded cream, for sandwiches, as they are not so dry. Egg sandwiches, too, are favorites with my little people—to one hard-boiled egg, chopped fine and properly seasoned, and one teaspoonful of finely minced ham, tongue or other cold meat, with one-half teaspoonful of melted butter. Spread this mixture evenly between thin and thinly-buttered slices of bread. Sometimes I give them [illegible]-boiled eggs, cut in slices, the slices [illegible] buttered and fitted together again, [illegible] them a welcome addition to their [illegible] and I always, if at all possible [illegible] bit of fruit—a pear, apple, [illegible] grapes, and above all [illegible] make the lunch attractive. [illegible] little willow basket, the [illegible], and I hemstitched, [illegible] ered a set of fine linen [illegible] which are never put [illegible] to place between the [illegible] od, of which I never [illegible] e varieties, including [illegible] only fancy, but it [illegible] n enjoy their lunch- [illegible] tily put up. At all [illegible] hich basket comes [illegible] Health.

Bouquet Prices.

[illegible] the prices of florists up [illegible] eat. Yesterday morning [illegible] into the small shop near [illegible] Twenty-third street, and [illegible] the fashion of mankind: [illegible] to buy a bouquet to send to a [illegible]

"Something nice?"

"Certainly; something with roses and violets in."

"Well," said the proprietor thoughtfully, "violets is mighty dear now. The kind of a bouquet that a man of your sort would want would cost $25."

A shadow passed over the face of the would-be purchaser, and he said:

"That's pretty steep."

"Well, violets is dear," said the man, "but I might fix you up something for $15."

The prospective customer walked out and entered another shop two blocks below. Here they thought they could get up a fair bouquet of violets and roses for $16. Then he walked up Broadway as far as Thirty-second street, and succeeded in getting a better bouquet than either one of the men had promised for $8. It was composed of violets and roses too.

THE CELORE CO.

GENTLEMEN—I have been having chills for about three (3) years, and have tried several remedies but to no avail. About three months ago, I was prevailed upon to try Celore. I used one package of that never-failing remedy for chills and to-day I feel no symptoms of their return.

Yours respectfully, WILLIS HOFLER.

WHITE MARSH, MD., August 1, 1888.

THE CELORE CO.

SIRS—I have had rather a hard time to introduce Celore, as the people here thought that nothing would stop the chills but quinine. But since they have tried Celore they say it not only stops the chills but makes a complete cure. It is well started now, however, and as I am out of goods, please ship immediately. Yours truly, J.
