Carlisle, February 9, 1803.

WE are under the painful necessity of announcing to the public the destruction by fire (on Thursday, the 3d instant) of the new edifice lately erected for the accommodation of the students of Dickinson college.

This spacious and elegant brick building had been nearly completed. As many apartments as were necessary for the present number of professors and students, were finished and occupied. This, however, had only been the case for a few months: And as the room intended for the library and philosophical apparatus was not quite in readiness for their reception, these had not been removed from the old building, and consequently are preserved. The well known public spirit of one of the trustees, who had purchased the old building, has led him to give it again to the use of the college, in an improved state—and consequently the business of the institution goes on as formerly, without any interruption. No gentleman, therefore, need be discouraged from sending his son here, because of the loss of the new building; for this calamity, far from discouraging the trustees and professors, will stimulate them to renewed activity, in order to put the college on the most respectable footing.

The smoking ruins had not time to cool before a subscription was opened, and the liberal inhabitants flocked together, almost without solicitation, and contributed so handsomely to the rebuilding of the college, that the trustees are determined to enter on the business immediately. They subscribed largely to the first, and they have now set a noble example, by subscribing more largely to the second edifice. Not only so—but they have scarcely given themselves a moment's rest, making every exertion to induce others to act a similar part; and they will immediately solicit wherever there is any prospect of success.

They address themselves to the sympathy, benevolence and public spirit of their fellow citizens; particularly those of Cumberland county; who, they trust, will be ambitious of maintaining in its centre, and in one of the most pleasant and healthy situations in America, a seminary of such importance, and which promises to be of such general utility.

They address themselves, in an especial manner, to those many shining characters, Divines, Physicians and Attornies, who have received their education here, and pray them to open subscriptions at their several places of residence, and by setting an example stimulate many others to generous exertions. They cannot suppose that they, and the other inhabitants of this borough, will be left alone, to accomplish a work so noble in itself, so useful to society, and which may extend its benign influence to the latest posterity. What are a few dollars in the possession of a man of wealth, compared with the maintaining of a seminary, so well calculated to diffuse the light of science far and wide, and to train up and qualify men for the highest offices in our happy Republic?

The wish of the Trustees is to enlarge their plan, and have it in their power to accommodate the students from abroad in the public buildings. Of this object they will not lose sight, unless greatly disappointed in their hopes of liberal aid.

While they mourn the loss of so much property, they have the consolation to think that it was occasioned by no evil design; but by a spark contained in ashes, driven from some distance by the wind, to where some shavings lay in an unfinished part of the building; and so very violent was the gale of wind that immediately after arose, that though the fire had made but small progress, when first discovered, its advances were so rapid as to defy any attempts to extinguish it. The gale was indeed so strong as to carry the flying coals over the whole extent of the town; and had it not pleased a kind Providence to send with the wind a light shower of snow to moisten the roofs of the houses, and other combustible matters in town, on which the living embers fell in showers, the whole borough would probably have been one scene of desolation. ON the 18th instant, a person who calls himself WILLIAM RODMAN, put into my hands, for sale, a dark brown HORSE, about 14½ hands high, supposed to be 8 or 9 years old, and is a natural pacer—which horse I sold at auction; but from the conduct of the said Rodman since, a suspicion is entertained that the horse was stolen, and in consequence he has been committed to Baltimore county jail. Rodman says he formerly lived in the state of Pennsylvania, but now resides with his father up the North river, 20 miles above the city of New-York. He is of a slender make, dark complexion, dark eyes, black hair, appears to be five feet nine or ten inches high, and 25 or 26 years old; his cloathing indifferent.—The object of this advertisement is, that if the horse should be stolen the owner may obtain him again, and the thief be brought to justice.
