CHARLESTON, July 20.

Extract of a letter from Liverpool, dated 17th May, 1803.

"Upland cottons are rather more in demand than when we last advised you.—Those packed in square bales, provided they be in good condition, will command a preference; but they frequently come to market packed in a very careless manner. The bales of the Charleston company* are getting into repute, and some sales have been made from a halfpenny to a penny higher than the current market price.

* The South-Carolina cotton company are here meant.

Extract of a letter from Port-au-Prince, dated, 5th July, 1803.

"There has been, a few days ago, an engagement off the Mole, between the convoy of a British merchant fleet, and a French sloop of war and a frigate; of which the result was, that the sloop of war was taken, and the frigate escaped into the Mole, after a loss of forty men. The ca[illegible] is not yet known; but it is presumed to[illegible] French vessels would not answer the salutes of the British ship of the line, and a frigate. I hope this may be the case, for if war is declared, we shall be badly off here."

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

MONDAY, August 1.

The governor of this state and one of his council have come to an open and violent quarrel. Edward Hall has given his excellency a shot, which has been returned by the latter with a full broadside. Ten to one but Hall is blown out of water, or that his reputation is shivered to atoms.

We cannot help smiling at the following complaint of the governor: "I may truly say, that in more than twenty years in which I have been engaged in elections, and in all the violence of former parties, I have never experienced such rancorous personal opposition as on the present occasion."

The reason is so palpable that we cannot suppose that it could have escaped the sagacity and anticipation of the governor—He is now contending against a democrat; but he never was before!

Whereas sundry representations have been made to this office of losses sustained in the transmission of money by the mail, whereby it appears that depredations may have been committed by some agents of that department. Irish method to ruin a Banker.

In the late rebellion in Ireland, John Claudius Beresford, who is a member for the city of Dublin, and is also a banker, by his great vigilance, in detecting and punishing the rebels in various parts of the country, made himself so obnoxious to them, that whenever they plundered a house, and found any of his bank notes, the general cry was—"By ---, we'll ruin the rascal, we'll destroy every note of his we can find," and they actually destroyed, it is supposed, upwards of 20000l of his notes in the course of the rebellion.

His excellency Jonathan Trumbull, esq. governor of the state of Connecticut, has issued his proclamation, announcing that John B. Gilpin is recognized by the executive of the United States, as his Britannic majesty's vice-consul, for the states of Connecticut and Rhode-Island.

ARRETE

Respecting the opening of the different ports of Guadoloupe and its dependencies: and a new tariff of the duties of import and export.

Basseterre, 6th Messidor, year 11.
(June 15, 1803*)*

Auguste Ernouf, general of division, captain general of Guadaloupe and its dependencies, and Daniel Lescallier, counsellor of state and colonial prefect.

Considering that the critical circumstances, in which they find the colony, call for efficacious measures for supplying its wants and those of the army, as well as for disposing of the colonial productions at present on hand, decree as follows:

Art. 1. The ports of Basseterre, Point-Petre, Baye-Mahaut, St. Martin and Reunion Marie Galante, shall be open to strangers from the date hereof.

In consequence, all articles of consumption, salted meats, military and naval stores, cattle, lumber, and tools of every kind, particularly instruments of agriculture, may be imported by them; and they may export sugars, coffee, and cotton, independently of syrups and taffia.

Art. 2. On the arrival of each vessel, the captain or supercargo is to wait on the captain-general and colonial prefect, and afterwards apply to the chief of administration and the director of the custom-house for the necessary permits, having previously made out a detailed statement of what the cargo is composed.

Art. 3. If such statement shall be found to have been forged, the transgressor shall be prosecuted in manner and form prescribed by the laws and regulations of commerce.

Art. 4. No French or neutral vessel can depart from any of the ports of the colony before her captain or supercargo has made a declaration at the custom-house of the nature of her cargo, and of the tonnage or quantity.

Art. 5. No vessel shall load, in whole or in part, at any other ports than those designated in the 1st article, unless by the express permission of the colonial prefect, under penalty of confiscation of vessel and cargo, and the punishment of the captain.

Art. 6. French as well as foreign vessels, sailing to and from the islands or neutral ports, are expressly forbidden to pass by way of the river Salee, under pain of confiscation of vessel and cargo.

Art. 7. The duties of anchorage, established by the arrete of the 1st Vendemiaire last, concerning the commerce of neutrals, are diminished one fourth from this day. These duties shall be collected by the receiver general of the colony and of the domains, at the payment of the duties of entrance and clearance; a part to be paid the captain of the port, the balance to be deposited in the public treasury.

Art. 8. The interpreters commissioned by government, shall not, under penalty of deprivation of office, demand from captains of foreign vessels more than eight dollars for all the necessary formalities in which they are to give them every direction from their arrival to their departure; but if the said interpreters shall be employed by the said captains of vessels on objects different from those customary, they shall be indemnified for their trouble in the manner prescribed by the tariff of April, 1771.

Art. 9. The duties of import and export, on articles permitted to be imported and exported, shall be paid at the custom-house, and collected by the receiver of the domains, according to the following tariff:

IMPORT.

French vessels, arriving from a port of the republic, shall continue to pay a local duty of one per cent. upon merchandize subject to weight: 1 per cent.

French vessels, arriving from foreign ports, shall pay a local duty of one per cent. on the value of articles of subsistence: 1 per cent.

Foreign vessels shall pay the customary duties of one per cent. local, and one per cent. additional on the total amount of the articles imported: 2 per cent.

EXPORT.

French vessels, returning to a French port, are subject to a local duty of one per cent. and a colonial duty of two per cent: 3 per cent.

French vessels returning to a foreign port, shall pay one per cent. local, and six per cent. additional: 7 per cent.

Foreign vessels shall pay the local duties and an additional one of two per cent. and of six per cent. on the value of sugars, coffee and cotton exported: 8 per cent.

On syrups and taffia no more than two per cent. shall be paid as a supplementary duty: 2 per cent.

Spanish vessels, laden with cattle and other provisions, shall be treated on their entrance and clearance, on the same terms as French vessels.

Art. 10. According to the preceding dispositions the arrete of the 1st Vendemiaire is and remains in force; and the third article of the arrete concerning the duty of six francs, collected by five myriagrames of cod and salt fish, of foreign fishery, is provisionally suspended, as well as the fifth article of the arrete of the 30th August, 1784, concerning the duty of three francs per quintal, on salt meat imported by foreigners.

Art. 11. All the regulations of the arrete of the 30th August, 1784, shall be executed, as they respect the vessels, declarations and formalities to be performed by foreign vessels and by French vessels engaged in the same commerce.

Art. 12. The chief of administration and the directors of the customs are respectively charged with what concerns the execution of the present arrete, which shall be printed, read, published and posted up as is usual, and a copy addressed to the commissary of justice in order to be enregistered among the rolls of the tribunals.

AGRICULTURAL.

Make no more haste than good speed, is is advice worth observing. Haste often makes waste. Some lose more by their precipitancy than they gain by their industry. They are in so great a hurry about one thing that they forget other things and accomplish nothing. They have half a dozen designs in their heads at once, demanding attention, and like a litter of pigs pushing away one another. They are busy in collecting; and what they gather with their hands they kick away with their feet.

Fervidus is one of this sort of men.—No man is more busy, or does less to the purpose. A piece of ground must be ploughed to-day. To-morrow something else must be done. He hires a plough; tackles his team; drives them on the full run into the field; has forgot his plough; whips the boy because he did not think of it; hastens back after it; the boy runs home; it is noon before he can bring his matters together, and he does but half a day's work. In the course of a summer he overturns several loads of hay. There is the appearance of a shower, he goads on his cattle; and instead of looking at his cart, looks at the clouds; his load is overset, and out in the rain. He rises in a winter morning, with a determination to sled home three loads of wood. He must first get his boots mended. He runs to the barn; throws some hay to the cattle in the stables; forgets those in the yard; never shuts the door; hastens to the shoemaker, but has left his boots at home; runs back after them—finds his cattle in the barn, and his oxen at the corn cribs; drives them out with vengeance; goes into the house in a foam; strikes the first he meets, for leaving the barn door open; concludes his oxen will die; cooks a mess to prevent the fatal effects of the corn they have eaten; in his hurry kicks it over, and then prepares another. He gets no wood to-day; keeps himself in a fret, and his family in a tumult. He gives his people no orders how to employ themselves; they lose their time; and at night he is in a rage because not a soul has done any work. Fervidus fully believes the doctrine of witchcraft, and his family are soberly of opinion, that there is an evil spirit.

RAN away from the subscriber, on Sunday, the 24th instant, a negro man by the name of LIGE, or Elijah: he is of the middle stature, and well made, 5 feet 6 or 7 inches high, and supposed to be between twenty-three and twenty-four years old; has short wool and round face; a few pits of the small pox on the side of his nose and about his face, and a scar on some part of his face: had on and took with him, a pair of white dimity trousers, blue cloth jacket, a pair of coarse shoes, and some other clothing not recollected. It is supposed he has taken passage in a sloop for Norfolk, and that he will make for a Mr. Edward Cooper, sail-makea, in that town. As he is well acquainted with the Chesapeake bay, and also with working a vessel, it is very probable he may apply for a birth in some vessel bound to sea. He was raised on Fell's-Point by a Mr. Cooper; and it is said he has a pass bearing the county seal. I will give the above reward if bro't home.

To the Printers of the U. States.

LEFT the service of the subscriber on Monday the 18th instant, an apprentice to the printing business, named JOHN ELLIOTT, a native of Sagharbor, (Long-Island) He is a little past 20 years, about 5 feet 6 inches high, thick set, brown hair, and his eyes a dark hazle. There is no mark on his countenance by which he can be particularly designated; but it is one of that peculiar cast which inspires neither respect nor confidence: it is at once indicative of some strength of mind, and of the most ungovernable and wicked passions. As he furnishes an instance of ingratitude, dishonor and meanness, which has but few parallels, the subscriber trusts that every person in the calling to whom he may apply for employment, will treat him with decided and deserved disapprobation. His capacity in the line is considerable, for he has had the most liberal opportunities. His privileges have been unusually great; but they fell far short of those ideas which he had formed of his own consequence. His perquisites (independent of being genteelly cloathed) have probably exceeded those of any other apprentice in the United States: but they were very inadequate to the pressing demands which were occasioned by his constant devotion to a certain choise class of society with which it was his delight to associate. He has affected to hold all authority in contempt, and disregarded the most friendly admonitions; and no treatment, however liberal, could appease his murmurings, nor deter him from exciting frequent disorders and mutinies among younger apprentices.

The subscriber will be thankful for any information concerning him, and will reward any person that will apprehend and confine him in any jail in the United States, and give due notice of the same.
