Corn Caused Death.—As a result of cutting a corn, Mrs. Alice Powell died yesterday afternoon at her home, at No. 233½ Market street, Wilmington. It was some time that Mrs. Powell, who is the wife of a local fish merchant, sought relief from a painful corn by paring it. Shortly after blood poisoning set in and it was necessary to amputate the toe, but this failed to save her life, and yesterday she died.

GROW COW PEAS.

A Rich Neck Farmer Tells How to Grow Hay for Seed or Feed — Diversified Farming.

The following interesting and important address was delivered before the Rick Neck Farmers Club at the home of Mr. S. R. Hurlock, near Chestertown, last Thursday, by one of the members who harvested last year 250 bushels of seed and who will sow one hundred acres this year.

"Gentlemen — I think most of us are feeling the necessity of better pasture lands and hay fields, but will not this condition continue so long as we grow only two money crops, viz., wheat and corn? Can we expect improvement without adopting modern methods of diversified farming? I think not, and therefore suggest that the Cow Pea be given a permanent position in our regular rotation of crops. I believe it to be the best of forage plants and second to no other plant for soil improvement, my five years association with the Cow Pea has made me something of a crank on this question and I will not ask you to believe all I say about this wonderful plant, but will be satisfied if I convince you that it is worth a trial.

The short time available will not permit of my taking up the birth and growth of bacteria that live within the tissues and roots of the plant or the way free nitrogen is taken forming the chemical combination that are indispensable to plant growth.

My talk will be confined principally to the varieties I have grown successfully for pasture, hay and seed, with my method of harvesting, curing for seed and hay.

The past season of 1906 we used the Grey Crowder, Whipporwill and Black. The first planting is made as soon after the first of May as the weather will permit using one bushel of seed per acre, care being taken to cover the seed as shallow as possible so as to take full advantage of the surface heat of the soil; deep planting at this early season will prove a failure. This planting is cut for hay the latter part of June or the first of July; the field is then worked over and Cow Peas again planted for fall pasture or for a seed crop; and then disked and planted to wheat if climatic condition have been at all favorable. In about 125 days we have harvested from one and one half to two tons of hay per acre, and if you seed about fifty bushels per acre. The hay after being threshed for seed, I figure, will pay all costs, thus leaving a net balance of 1½ tons of hay and fifteen bushels of seed per acre.

We have here told by Institute workers and lecturers that the proper time to cut for hay is when the peas are formed and the leaves are turning yellow, this is all right for late hay but what about the early part of the season when our barricks are empty and you see tears in the eyes of your horse when they pass the Cow Pea field? You who have grown Cow Peas no doubt have noticed that up to a certain stage of maturity stock will not eat them, this is because they are bitter and unpalatable. If cut for hay at this time the result will be failure and the Cow Pea put down as being no good. Not being able to secure information along these lines necessity forced me out into my fields to seek it, as soon as the field shows full bloom I begin to taste the vines myself and when I find the vine sweet, like sorghum, I put my mowers to work and have never failed to get hay that all stock eat greedily and at least two weeks earlier than if I had waited for the leaves to turn yellow.

The whipporwill can be cut from a week to ten days earlier than the Crowder, and the Black that I have been using will require about fifteen days longer time than the Crowder. In point of productiveness in forage and seed the Crowder carries off firm honors and is my favorite. This pea ripens its seed more uniformly than any that I have used; the Whipporwill is my second choice and the Black third choice, more especially for pasturage. I have not succeeded in fertilizing Cow peas profitably and have discontinued the use of fertilizer on this crop; where wheat follows cow peas I have failed to produce an increase in the crop where nitrogen formed a part of the fertilizer and think this expensive ingredient can be very profitably left out. If the results obtained by you who are growing cow peas bear me out in this, then the cow pea will have another valuable quality, viz., that of enabling us to reduce our fertilizer bills to a minimum."
