"A MAN OF THE PEOPLE"

the office of his brother, where he became a student. Two years afterward he was admitted to the bar at Elkton and first began practicing before Judge John M. Robinson, Frederick Stump, now deceased, and Judge Wickes, who has since been retired.

After his admission to the bar Judge Crothers took a special course in the law department of the University of Maryland. At the completion of this he entered active practice, and up to the time of his appointment on the bench enjoyed a remunerative clientage.

In 1891 he was elected State's Attorney of Cecil county, serving four years. He was chosen in 1897 to the State Senate, where he served with distinction, being recognized as the leader of the Senate from the time of his entrance. During his term of office he was always ready to defend the rights of the people and to prevent unnecessary expenditures of the public money.

He was again nominated in 1901, but was defeated, owing to local factional differences. Again he became the party's candidate in 1905, and after a sharp contest, in which dissensions were rife in the party, he was defeated.

Judge Crothers continued the practice of his profession until March, 1907, when Governor Warfield appointed him to the bench in the Second judicial circuit to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Edwin H. Brown. In that position he has performed his duties in such a manner as to bring credit, respect and confidence to himself and satisfaction to the people.

Simple in His Tastes.

In his tastes Judge Crothers possesses the simplicity of men who have achieved much. While a bachelor, he has always maintained a fondness for home, and no pleasure is greater to him than to visit the old farm.

He resides at the Felton Hotel, in Elkton, but it would be more accurate to say that he lives in his suite of offices when not engaged in professional duties. His offices themselves tell of the character of the man. His fondness for music, his taste for literature, history and the drama are evident in books and pictures. He has a fondness for children and among his admirers are many little tots who are pleased at his salutation or a pat on the head as he passes them on the street.

A quality which stands out pre-eminent is his love for his family, which, as previously stated, once numbered nine children, but has dwindled to five. The memories of those departed are revered by him, especially in the case of his elder brother, Charles C., to whom Judge Crothers was particularly attached.

Many things which tend to amuse and divert the minds of business men do not appeal to Judge Crothers. His tastes and inclinations are rather for outdoor life. The green fields and wooded hills appeal to him. He likes the quiet that nature gives and often can be found walking in the adjacent country early in the morning. He attributes his robust health to his methodical life. At one time he occasionally indulged in a cigar, but he has given up smoking.

A Total Abstainer.

While liberal in his views as to individual rights, he is a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors. His explanation for this is that the first taste of liquor prescribed for him by an allopathic physician. It may have been the size of the dose or the quality of the liquor, but from that day to the present time he concluded to do without it.

Judge Crothers, while not a communicant, is a regular attendant at the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Elkton. On many occasions he visits the places of worship of other denominations, including the Episcopal, Presbyterian and Catholic. He is counted among the contributors to the support of all the religious denominations in the town.

Stories told by his neighbors indicate that he is not only big in stature and in mind, but big in heart as well. All the preferment, political, social and business, that has come to him, said one of his neighbors, has not stifled his memory as to his own efforts to attain the position that he occupies. No greater pleasure is enjoyed by Judge Crothers than to extend a helping hand to his fellow-man in attempting to scale the ladder of life. It has been recalled that on more than one occasion, without appeals being made to him, he has assisted in furnishing means by which young men have equipped themselves for life's battle. And it can be added that in a majority of these cases his kindness has been rewarded by seeing the recipients of his aid enjoying distinction in various vocations.

In addition to the personal congratulations received by Judge Crothers, he is receiving a constant stream of telegrams from all over the State, while each mail arriving at his office brings numerous letters. All are filed away for acknowledgment.

THERE is one sort of man that there is no place for in the universe, and that is the wabbler, the man on the fence, who never knows where he stands who is always slipping about, dreaming, apologizing never daring to take a firm stand on anything. Everybody despises him. He is a weakling. Better a thousand times have the reputation of being eccentric, peculiar and cranky even, than never to stand for anything.
