Sewing Machine Foresight

When you choose a sewing machine you want to get one that lasts a lifetime, and there's only one way to get it—through a Singer store, or salesman. Beware of nondescript machines sold in job lots. They last only as long as their weakest parts. The loss or break of a single part renders these machines utterly useless, as the part cannot be readily replaced. When you rent or buy a

A TRIBUTE TO MARYLAND

On The Two Hundred and Seventy-Fourth Anniversary of Her Settlement.

[Respectfully dedicated to the State and county superintendents, teachers and pupils of the public schools of Maryland.]

Hail Maryland! thou grand old State,
Today thy birth we celebrate
And raise our thankful voices high
To him the God of earth and sky.

Hail to the Calverts! dear of old,
Who brave the storm, and sleet and cold.
To found a land untrammeled free,
A land of sacred liberty.

Hail to the vessels Ark and Dove,
Glad messengers of peace and love,
Bearing true hearts across the sea;
Hearts of religious liberty.

Dear Maryland, I love thy hills,
Thy winding rivers, tiny rills,
Thy mountains, bathed in glory grand,
A type of Prince Immanuel's Land.

My heart with fondest rapture thrills,
When I survey thy plains and hills,
And thank my God forever more
That I reside on Maryland's shore.

'Tis here my childhood's hours were spent
In happiness and peace content,
To worship Him in pæans grand,
With freedom, truth in Maryland.

Of all the lands in East or West,
I love old Maryland State the best;
Her noble sons majestic stand—
The pride and glory of the land.

My visions of her deeds are bright;
Her sires and sons for truth and right
Dared, in the face of England's power,
To stand for right when storms did lower.

When in the evening time of life
Are hushed the busy cares and strife,
My thoughts shall turn to Maryland;
To me the grandest of the band.

To all the States I give my hand,
My heart I give to Maryland,
For her my prayers shall e'er ascend.
My home, my State, till time shall end.

And when my race on earth is run,
And slowly sinks life's setting sun,
Then lay my body down to rest
On Maryland soil, the grandest, best.

NET BRINGS MILLIONS.

How The Fish Are Caught In The Bay And Converted Into Oil And Fertilizer.

Much has been written about the wealth of the great Chesapeake and the richness of its natural supply of oysters, fish and game; but very little has been said relative to the supply of menhaden that is yearly taken from this great body of water.

The menhaden fishing industry has reached proportions that bring the tolls from the deep up into millions of dollars and is exceeded in point of revenue by the oyster trade only.

Beginning with the great Wicomico river on the western side of the bay and continue down the shore until you reach Pungoteague, Va., you will see factory after factory dotting the shore line where the fish are converted into oil and fertilizer for the markets of the world.

The natural supply of these fish cannot but be of vital interest to the farmer, for fish "scrap," as it is called, is one of the chief ingredients of his fertilizers. And no less valuable is the supply of oil that comes from the fish. This oil, while it has a rancorous smell in its raw state, when processed is no more like the original than the proverbial "chalk and cheese." Much of it is said to be used in the manufacture of fine soaps; another portion is used for mixing paints, and it is believed that some of it is sold as cod liver oil.

Some idea as to the amount of money invested in this business may be had from the following statistics, which have been carefully prepared:

Twelve factories, valued at $430,000.
Twenty-six steamers, valued at $390,000.
Value of yearly output, $1,260,000.

The steamers that are engaged in this traffic are trim and seaworthy, ranging in size from 100 tons, the smallest, to 200 tons, the largest. Each of these boats carries a crew of from 25 to 40 men.

The Menhaden Fleet.

If one should be going down the bay some afternoon during the menhaden season, perchance one might espy several rifts of smoke floating toward the horizon black enough to lead one to the belief that one was approaching the Pacific Squadron. Closer investigation with the glasses, however, would soon bring the discovery that one was meeting a fishing fleet. There would be perhaps 10 or 15 fishing steamers in the fleet, cruising around trying to locate a "school."

It may so happen that as they draw near you you observe that they have slackened speed and that the decks seem to be alive with men. You see the sailors begin to man the small fishing boats that are piled up high over the sides with net. Then it is that you can get ready to witness such a taking of fish as is beyond your most vivid imagination.

To the experienced eye the cast that is being made into the deep does not savor of success, for not a sign of a fish is in sight. But the trained eye of the fishermen at the mast head has told him a better story. He knows that a certain field tinged with a reddish color below the surface of the waves denotes the presence of his quarry.

Preparations are now made for the setting of the net, the boats starting from each other and going in a circle until they meet, thus surrounding the body of fish. If the fishermen do not make a "stab" (fishing parlance denoting that the fish have escaped), they give a shout of triumph, which is answered by a shrill whistle from the steamer and the pursing begins.

This means that although the fish are surrounded by the net, yet there is no absolute certainty of landing the prey. Getting the fish into the net is one thing. Getting them out of the net is another.

Landing The Fish.

Various obstacles may oppose the successful landing of the fish that have been cornered at so much care and trouble. The pursing of the net begins by bringing the bottom lines of it together by means of pulleys attached to heavy weights lying on the bottom.

As soon as it is known that the bottom of the net is together, then the men begin to gradually bring it toward the surface, thus forcing the fish to the top of the water, where they can be dipped out with a large net and loaded into the hold of the steamer.

Should there, however, be some foreign matter on the bottom and within the confines of the net, such, for instance, as the timbers of an old wreck, a large pile of rock or something like that, then pursing is impossible; and not only do they in such cases lose the fish, but many times the net also, for it becomes so entangeled in the wreckage that it has to be cut and torn in order to free it.

It is not always such a case as this either that causes the loss of net and fish. The writer remembers being at Reedville, Va., once last summer when one of the fishing steamers came into the harbor and reported the loss of a good prospective catch of fish and also the net.

It seems that they had made a "set" off Pungoteague, Va., and it gave promise of a very good catch; but when they tried to purse the net they found that it could not be moved. After exhausting all of the means and strength that they possessed the steamer was signalled for but even after they had made use of the steamer's hoisting apparatus they found the result to be the same. The boats had to lay by the net all during the evening and the following night. At last they had to put a large hawser to the net and start the steamer full speed ahead, tearing the net into shreds and releasing what few fish that yet remained alive. The real trouble was that the body of fish was so large and that the net, overfreighted, settled to the bottom. After it was torn away thousands upon thousands of dead fish began to float to the surface with the tide.

A Gigantic School.

The captain of the boat said that it was the largest body of fish that he had ever seen or heard of. He ventured the opinion that there were enough fish in that body to have loaded three or four of the largest steamers on the bay.

Such a body of fish as this is, of course, unusual; but frequently a steamer will get a load at one "set" or from what is known as one "school." This means, if a large steamer, 700,000 fish, according to fish measure; if counted correctly it is ofttimes more than double the quantity, and instead of 700,000 may be 1,400,000. Just think of it! If menhaden were food fish that would be enough to supply the markets of a large city for weeks and weeks.

It might be supposed that during the course of a season the fishermen would sometimes get a dip of some other fish. This does sometimes happen, but not often. They try very hard to guard against any such error, for several reasons.

In the first place, no fish that they can catch is as profitable to them as menhaden. And again the law will not permit the catching of any other fish by them, excepting bluefish, which may be caught, but not cooked. Even such valuable fish as this they try to avoid, because if you get your net once around a field of bluefish and let them see that they are prisoners the chances are that before fishing again you will need a new net.

These fish have always been a terror to the menhaden fishermen, for he knows they are as destructive to his seine as a shark to a gillnett. And that is something to avoid when it is known that one of these nets cost from $1,200 to $1,500.

The menhaden season starts March 25 and last until October 15.

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

It was an association of gentlemen, professionally physicians and chemists, all of whom were born in the drug trade, so to speak, and who have been connected with it all their lives, who first gave to the world Castoria, which as every one knows is a pleasant and effective remedy for the ailments of infants and children. It has always been recognized as a meritorious preparation, and its reward has been the greatest popularity ever enjoyed by any remedy ever but upon the market; attained, not by flamboyant advertising or appeals to ignorance or vulgar prejudice, but by inherent merit. All physicians recommend it, and many very many, prescribe it.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does to-day. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

Much is printed nowadays about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCrann has. Not only do these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine or other baneful narcotic.

Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines, Hall's Journal of Health, however says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."
