MPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON

REAT EXCITEMENT ON THE SLAVERY QUESTION——WITHDRAWAL OF SOUTHERN MEMBERS.

Our special correspondent, in a note inclos g the annexed notice of yesterday's proceedings in Congress, says:—"We are in the midst a tremendous excitement on the Slave uestion."—Baltimore American.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20th.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker made the fourth appointment n the Committee of Ways and Means this nouning.—Mr. Pope of Ky was selected to ill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation f Mr. Everett.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS was then ade the orders of the day in the House, and e unfinished was well named the further onsideration of the Petitions praying for the bolition of Slavery in the District of Coumbia. The merits of the whole Slave ques- on were involved in the discussion, and the ay has been in the House one of unusual ex- itement. Mr. Slade has had the floor the most of the day, and coming from Vermont, where Abolition grows up spontaneously with children to manhood, you can imagine the haracter of his Petitions and his speech. To peak of it in a few words, it is the very essence of all that Thompson, Garrison, May & Co. have written and spoken on the excit- ing topic of Slavery.

In the very outset of his remarks he was interrupted by Mr. Wise of Virginia, for in- timating that the motion to lay Abolition memorials upon the table was the result of combination, &c. on the part of Southern members. Mr. Dawson, of Georgia, also called him to order for the same reference, and Mr. Slade satisfied them by disclaiming all personal feeling and all personal references to the charge.

Mr. Slade continued his remarks and the Southern members became more and more excited. The Speaker at length called him to order for wandering from the subject.

Mr. Legare, of South Carolina, got the floor, and asked permission to say a few words. He was under the influence of great feeling and excitement, and begged the member from Vermont not to proceed. Mr. L. as one of the most eloquent men in the House, was too much excited at the present moment to speak with any degree of coolness With great ardor and justice he vindicated the South from the attack made by Mr. Slade, and said that the homes and fire-sides of the South—her dearest interests and her peace—her domestic happiness—all that she had and was—was identified with this question; and he therefore begged that the member from Vermont would desist.

Mr. Slade refused again and again to yield the floor, except when called to order by the members of the House. Mr. Dawson, of Georgia, twice asked permission to reply to some severe remarks made by Mr S., but Mr. S. refused to yield the floor. Here Mr Legare, much excited, moved an adjournment, although it was not then one o'clock. Mr. Legare's motion was not in order and of course was not put by the Speaker. Mr. Dawson, of Georgia, called for the order of the day,—the further consideration of the President's Message;—the motion was not in order, and Mr. Slade was again suffered to proceed.

For a half hour Mr. Slade went on without interruption, animadverting in strong language not merely upon Slavery in the District of Columbia, but in all the States.

Mr. Dawson, Mr. Wise and Rhett called him to order. But from the nature of the subject, which I will explain by and by, Mr. Slade was not out of order, and was again suffered to proceed. The House at length became too hot—Mr. Slade's remarks too personal—and the Southern members too much excited to hear more.

Mr. Rhett and Mr. Wise at the same moment both called him to order, and for the first time the call was in order. Mr. Slade was reading the opinions of several distinguished men upon the merits of slavery. By a rule of the House it is not in order to read from any document, book or pamphlet without the consent of the House. The members objected, and Mr. Slade was compelled to take his seat.

This, however, was the last exciting part of the scene. Mr. Wise, after saying that Mr. Slade had entered into a full examination of the merits of the Slave Question, CALLED UPON THE SOUTHERN DELEGATION TO LEAVE THE HALL. "Agreed!"—"Agreed!"—"Agreed!" was responded by a dozen voices, and in company with twenty or twenty-five members from the Southern States, Mr. Wise left the hall.

The House was here in great confusion. A half dozen members rose upon the floor calling and being called to order. Mr Rhett said that the southern Delegation would meet in the District of Columbia Committee Room, at 3 o'clock. Mr Slade begged permission to go on in order.

Mr. McKay, of N. C. called him to order and the Speaker told him to take his seat. His motion "to be premitted to proceed in order" was, however, put to the House, and the yeas and nays, demanded. A motion was now made to adjourn. Mr. Adams, of Mass. demanded the yeas and nays. The House seconded the call and the result was 106 in favour of adjournment, and 65 against it.

Mr Campbell, of S. C. at this moment appeared in the Hall having been selcted by the Southern Members in the Committee Room to request the attendance of all the members representing the interests of the South.

The House then adjourned.

P. S. Mr. Slade's petition for the Abolition of Slavery in the District was accompanied with instructions to report a bill for the Abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia. The Report made his remarks in order, and hence the reason why he was not called to order with success.

IN SENATE.

The Senate passed the day in consideration of private matters of no importance to your readers. The session was a short one, and many of the Senators were in the House, listening to the exciting debate. Yours, &c.
