went on for a week, when Davis consented to answer, and being sworn, the Coroner says, "what do you know about this melancholy affair, Mr Davis?" "Nothing at all, sir," said Davis, and so the matter ended. But he had been town talk, and a very important man, for a week."

☞ The large space devoted to Mr. Wright's speech to-day necessarily excludes much other important matter. We shall attend to our correspondent "S" next week.

☞ We hear it reported that the Bill limiting the term of service of Clerks and Registers has passed by a large majority.

From the New York Evening Post.

IMMENSE MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLICAN MECHANICS AND WORKINGMEN.

The largest meeting of Democratic mechanics that ever convened in any building in the city of New York, assembled at Tammany Hall, on Tuesday evening, February 6, 1838, pursuant to a call upon the Democratic Republican Mechanics and Workingmen of the city and county of New York to assemble there and "express their views in relation to the divorce of bank and State, and the attempt making by the Federal party to curse the country with an irredeemable paper currency."

Since the memorable meeting of this great class of the Democracy in 1834, no assemblage in that Hall has been nearly equal to it in point of numbers, and none has ever exceeded it in point of unanimity of opinion or enthusiasm of feeling.

No public meeting that can be convened under any circumstances, or for any object, can ever present stronger claims to the attention of the Representatives of the people, or afford more decisive evidence of the popular will. It was composed exclusively of the mechanics and workingmen of this great city, whose personal experience of the oppressive effects of irresponsible banking monopolies, and an irredeemable paper currency enabled them to bear authentic testimony to the essential importance of that great and patriotic measure of the General Government, which is designed to relieve them from the one, and to express their unequivocal denunciations of that sordid combination of Federalists & traitors, who are scheming to perpetually defraud them with the other. Never was there a more manifest reliance of an immense body of the people upon the wisdom and inflexible patriotism of the Chief Magistrate of their choice; and never a more emphatic reprobation of the heartless designs of that Anti Republican party which opposes his righteous policy.

From this glorious meeting of the true wealth, uncorrupted virtue, and undeluded intelligence of New York, the oppressed Democracy of the State and of the whole country may imbibe anew the vivid feelings and unerring sentiments of Republican liberty. From it they may derive a timely inspiration of new confidence in the mighty cause of popular equity and right, and new courage to assert and defend it.

☞ Here follow the proceedings of the meeting. We regret that our limits prevent us from giving them at large to our readers. The resolutions adopted are of the right stamp, and give assurance that the democrats of that great city are democrats still. With regard to the numbers assembled the Post gives the following estimate.

"Various conjectures last evening at the overwhelming meeting in Tammany Hall, induced me this morning to measure the area of the internal surface so densely crowded. I find it to contain 552 square yards; and standing as they did, excessively jammed, each square yard must have been occupied by, at the lowest calculation, seven persons. Therefore, the aggregate of that vast assembly was 5,864 individuals, all sufferers by the present nefarious system of banking fraud."

In the following remarks of Mr. Duncan, he has hit off the "little man in specs" with admirable truth.—The play indeed, is hardly worth the candle, but it is well that it should be seen who are the hand and glove companions of Mr. Wise and the John Bull clique.

Mr. DUNCAN said he was opposed to going into the investigation. We have come here for higher and more valuable purposes than to resolve ourselves day after day, into a court of inquiry to investigate our own characters, and at the expense of the public's money, and to the neglect of the public business. He asked if the sun had rose during the present session without bringing to light a base calumny against some member of this House, or the House, aggregately, over the signature of some one of the base, corrupt, and penniless scoundrels who beset your Capitol in hungry swarms. He asked if it was intended to investigate every base charge that made its appearance; if so, we must abandon the business of the public entirely, however interesting and important it might be, and instead of being a House of Representatives, constituted to serve the public, resolve ourselves into a great court of inquiry, not to try others, (the legitimate object of every judicial tribunal,) but to try ourselves, and pronounce judgement in our own case and behalf. Sir, I hope no such policy will be adopted or commenced. This scurrilous, dirty communication is the production of one who is well known by the term of the "Washington Spy." This man, who now sits overlooking from the gallery, brooding calumny are detraction, black, base, and foul, is the apologist and eulogist of Aaron Burr—(He is worthy of such a purpose.) But we are told by the gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. JENIFER,) that this investigation ought to go on! the charge he understands to come from a respectable source. A respectable source!!! The gentleman from Maryland would not make the statement of respectability, if he knew the general character of the "Washington Spy;" he would not defame and blacken the term "respectable" designedly, by applying it to a wretch so base and degraded as the Washington Spy now in my eye. Perhaps the gentleman from Maryland has been taught, as has your humble speaker, to revere the head that is bald, and the eye that is dimmed by age, and from this laudable veneration was led to the abuse of the term "respectable," of which he has just been guilty. Sir, Elisha had a bald head, he was a just man, and feared God, but does it follow that every man who has a bald head is a just man, and has the fear of God before his eyes, or is entitled to the appellation of "respectable?"

It is probable that Elisha's eyes had grown dim, and that if spectacles were in his day discovered, he wore them, but I will ask my friend from Maryland, if every man who wears spectacles is an honest and an upright man? No, sir; we have a specimen of the converse of the propositions now before us, in the person of the Washington Spy. Sir, what further evidence do you want, or does the country require, that the author of this base slander, is a scoundrel, a liar, and a coward, than the fact that he has withheld his proper name. If you hear of a man at the city of Georgetown, passing himself off by the name of A. B—at the city of Alexandria by the name of C D—at your Navy Yard by the name of E F—and at Bladensburg by the name of G H, what other conclusion would you be likely to come to, in relation to that man, other than that he is a horse thief, a counterfeiter, or some base fellow who merits a residence in your District penitentiary. Such kind of character is presented to us in the person of the Washington Spy. But, sir, this is not the place to try him: I say we have higher duties to perform here: not the duties that appertain to ourselves, but those that appertain to the country.

Further, sir, I deny that any thing which the Washington Spy may say or publish is worthy of an investigation in this House or elsewhere. I say so, because I consider him so morally depraved, and so degraded in the estimation of every honorable and high-minded man, that he is literally incapable of the crime of slander. I mean by this, sir, that he is so notorious a liar, and so generally known to be such, that he is incapable longer of telling a falsehood. A gentleman asks me how that can be. I answer, that a falsehood is a moral perversion of the truth for the purpose of deception; but the Washington Spy is so notorious and degraded a liar that he can no longer deceive; therefore, the object or purpose intended failing, the falsehood fails with it. Sir, I shall vote against the original proposition and all the proposed amendments on the table, I will vote for the motion.

CONGRESSIONAL.

In the Senate to day Mr. Buchanan presented a series of resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, instructing the Senators from that State to vote for a postponement of the Sub-Treasury bill until the next session of Congress, also instructing them to vote for such a system as regards the public moneys as will separate the banks from the Government; and at the same time declaring their full confidence in the President of the United States.

Mr. Clay then delivered himself at large on the question of the Independent Treasury. He played his part as he would have done a broken hand at brag. Bold and audacious assertion, threatening and bluffing off contortions of feature, and utter inversion of the true condition of the adversary attacked, was the attitude assumed and given. He set up a new bill for that of Mr. Wright.

Abuse of the late venerable President was the principle ingredient of the opening part of the display, and severe and unjust personal animadversion on the course of Mr. Calhoun figured most strikingly in the conclusion. He charged Mr. Calhoun with abandoning the Whigs, with "horse, foot, and dragoons," and added aspersions on his motives; and then turned to Mr. Rives, and declared his Conservatism "a good half way house," where he could calculate on good cheer, and was willing to sojourn for a while. But he took care at the same time, to inform him that it was only a call in passing to the ultimate destination to which all would come at last—A NATIONAL BANK.

In argument, Mr. Clay was exceedingly feeble; in voice, looked, and gesture, extremely forcible. In the debate he may stand for one of Sir John Falstaff's recruits:

"Oh! most FORCIBLE FEEBLE."

After Mr. CLAY had concluded his remarks Mr. CALHOUN rose, and after stating, in most brief phrase, that the Senator from Kentucky had greatly misrepresented his statements and arguments, he remarked that he should take occasion, in his own good time, to cancel all obligations between them.

THE REFORM BILL.

The Frederick Citizen of the 2d inst. says:

This bill was confirmed by the senate on Wednesday week but the news of it did not reach us in time for our last paper. On yesterday it was the order of the day in the lower House. Whether it has been postponed or confirmed we have not heard

Some of the Senators appear to claim credit for having voted for the reform bill. What credit they are entitled to, may be inferred from their acts prior to the formation of that body, and the circumstances under which they accepted of their appointment to a seat in it.

None of the members of the State Senate, evinced the least interest in favor of reform, before the last Senatorial election. They attended no reform meetings; nor made a solitary effort, to obtain it on the contrary, as far as they could they threw every obstacle, and impediment in the way of those, who showed a determination to repossess themselves of those natural and civil rights to which they were justly entitled, and which were fraudulently withheld from them; and tyrannically denied to their petitions and remonstrances. This was their position prior to their election to the Senate.

It is fresh in the recollection of every one, that the electors of that body divided, in consequence of which a length of time elapsed, before a Senate could be formed; 19 of the electors proposed, that as they represented a large majority of the people, who were in favour of reform, they should be allowed to nominate a majority of reformers, to compose that body. The 21 who represented the minority opposed to reform, refused to the 19 any voice whatever. With a spirit worthy of freemen, the 19 indignantly refused to degrade themselves, and returned to their homes. In this state of things a letter was written by one of the 21, to some of the 19, inviting them to join the College promising that all reasonable changes and amendments of the Constitution should be granted.

In consequence of these promises, Messrs. George and Thomas went to Annapolis; and acting in concert with Fountain, Linthicum and Sellman, opened a correspondence with the 21, which resulted in a pledge from them that the Senate to be appointed, should, in the mode provided by the Constitution, reform that instrument.

It is not to be supposed, there was one member chosen to that body, so ignorant as not to be aware of the pledge by which he was bound upon accepting his appointment. He was compelled to vote for reform, and thus to consummate the bargain entered into between the contending reform and anti-reform electors. It was in a manner the tenure by which he held his seat. Some who had openly opposed reform, as McMahon and Price, would not accept the proferred seats upon such terms.

It is evident therefore, that none of the Senate of Maryland can claim any honor, for having passed the reform bill. They were the mere instruments through whose action the pledges of their sponsors were redeemed.

U. S. BANK.—Mr GRUNDY, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has made a very able and unanswerable report on the subject of Mr. BIDDLE's late flagrant and arbitary overthrow of the old charter of the Bank of the United States, to set up his new establishment. The report shows that, "without a semblance of right, in direct contravention of the charter, he sequestrated all the property of the old bank for the benefit of the new—that he took no step towards "a settlement and liquidation of the affairs and accounts of the corporation," as expressly required by the charter—that he presented no schedule of the debts and effects, and allowed the General Government no access to the account of an institution which it was bound to see honestly closed—that, instead of winding up the concern, and cancelling the notes in two years, he now reports nearly $16,000,000 of its paper on hand as a banking fund, and is actually passing out millions of money, after the institution is defunct, as a circulating medium. In a word, that the president has blended the two banks and gone on with both, in utter disregard of all law

The bank party.—Every federal legislature has rejected or indefinitely postponed the bills to compel the banks to resume specie payments.—Albany Argus.

☞ Every Democratic paper should let the people know this fact. It is well that they should be informed who it is that opposes there resumption of specie payments. Let the full odium of an irredeemable paper currency, fall where it is deserved.

More Instructions.—The Louisiana House of Representatives have passed a preamble and resolutions instructing the members of Congress from that state to vote against the establishment of a National Bank. After the resolutions were passed, a motion was made to strike out so much of the preamble as implicates the whig party in the charge of abolitionism, and identifies them with that tribe of fanatics; but the motion was lost, and the instructions will be presented to Congress in the form in which they passed that body.

The Commonwealth and Kilby Bank reports, made to the Senate yesterday, presented a rare specimen of banking institutions. The over drafts and memorandum checks at the former, were enormous, absorbing the whole capital, and as for the latter, it appeared they never had any capital to absorb, as 4500 shares out of 5000 were subscribed for by five persons whose notes were immediately discounted for the whole amount, and more recently converted into East Boston bonds and notes.—Boston Adv.

Mr. Preston, of the Senate has been confined to his lodgings, for eight or ten days past, by indisposition; but is now convalescent, and will, it is hoped, be able in a few days to return to his public duties.—Nat. Intel.

Fire at West Point.—A fire broke out in the Academy at West Point, on Monday last, which destroyed the property in the Engineering Academy, and Adjutant's Office, & came near destroying also the Chemical and Philosophical Apparatus, used for the instruction of the students.

GENERAL JACKSON.

We are highly gratified to learn from the Nashville Union of the 15th instant that Gen. JACKSON's health is so much improved that he can now leave his bed, and that he is rapidly gaining strength. No further danger from the present attack is apprehended.

A letter from the General himself, dated 12th inst. says: "I am compelled to make use of an amanuensis, on account of indisposition, occasioned by a return of my old complaint hæmorrhage from the lungs. The present attack has been rather a severe one; but it has now stopped, and I am feeling a great deal better."—Washington Globe.

A FEMALE HORSE THIEF.

The Baltimore Sun gives an account of the arrest of a horse-thief on Saturday at the Horse Market, who was, after committed to jail, discovered to be a woman. She had stolen the horse at Belle Air, Hartford co., and ridden him to Baltimore. On the discovery of her sex, she stated that she was a native of Yorkshire, England, and had worn male attire for three years, during part of which time she had worked as a laborer upon the canal.
