DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION DEADLOCKED

The First Ballot--All Night Session--Bryan A Factor--A Great Convention--Noted Men Present.

NO MAN KNOWS WHO THE NOMINEE WILL BE

The greatest convention in the history of any political party is now in session in Baltimore.

This Democratic National Convention opened Tuesday at the Fifth Regiment Armory, in Baltimore, for the purpose of naming candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The Armory, as well as the entire city, was beautifully decorated for the event, and the large crowds in attendance are being easily handled by the hotels.

The convention hall, seating 15,000 persons, was a sight long to be remembered. Yelling and shouting delegates and spectators, with bands of music and pretty banners, made excitement enough for the most enthusiastic Democrat. Then every Presidential candidate had his supporters.

Shouts for Bryan, Parker, Wilson, Clarke and other big Democrats would break out every few minutes, with men and women both standing on chairs, throwing hats, papers and flags aloft. The remarkable part was that they never seemed to tire, each yell being a little louder and longer than the preceding one.

The first fight was between the Progressives lead by Bryan and the Conservatives who united upon Judge Parker. Bryan nominated Senator Kern, the former vice-presidential candidate, for temporary chairman, but Kern refused to run and named Bryan. Then came the Bryan-Parker contest. Bryan went on the platform to speak. The vast assemblage gave him the strictest attention. He demonstrated early that he had lost none of his former power to control a tremendous crowd. When he said that he might have asked without immodesty for the temporary chairmanship, in view of the fact that after 16 years of battle the Republican party was adopting some of the things he had fought for, the crowd broke into a tremendous roar.

The bedlam grew to such an extent that Chairman Mack was compelled to rap for order for several minutes before it was quiet enough for Bryan to proceed.

Then Bell, of California, made one of the best speeches of the convention in seconding the nomination of Parker and he received as big an ovation as did Bryan. The vote for temporary chairman gave Parker a majority of 73.

After defeating Bryan for temporary chairman and electing Judge Alton B. Parker to that post of honor, the National Democratic Convention Tuesday night listened to the keynote speach of Judge Parker.

The New York jurist said kind things of the man, who a few hours before had lashed him with bitter invective, and even went so far as to express the hope that the convention would place Bryan on the Resolutions Committee. Judge Parker made a very strong speech, urging the convention to harmonize all differences and unite on a candidate who can win. He predicted Democratic victory next fall.

Wilson Cheered 20 Minutes.

On Wednesday the day was taken up in oratory. Ex-Governor Folk, of Missouri, Senator Rayner, of Maryland, and Congressman Clayton, all made fine addresses.

At 1 o'clock Wednesday a demonstration broke out for Governor Woodrow Wilson that will be part of the history when this convention is written. It continued for 20 minutes, and broke out again sporadically for half an hour.

Whatever doubt there may have been of the popularity of the New Jersey man and progressive Democracy in the minds of those who take regularity and conservatism for granted, it was dispelled surely and vociferously by one of the noisiest riots of joy and battle that ever marked a political gathering.

Men jumped to their chairs, pulled off coats to wave, threw their hats into the air, threw their handkerchiefs away, marched around the hall singing and yelling, hugged each other in excess of enthusiasm, and some one in one of the front rows even threw a quarter on the platform, where in the confusion it was lost under many feet.

By a vote of 41 to 11 a motion by William J. Bryan to adopt a platform after and not before the nominations are made, adopted by the resolutions committee.

Several opponents of Mr. Bryan made a bitter fight in the committee room against carrying out the plan on the ground that Mr. Bryan's position would give him control of the next Democratic candidate.

William J. Bryan and Senator O'Gorman, of New York, will write the platform of the Democratic National Convention.

The First Ballot Taken.

After a session lasting all night long, with speeches galore, the first ballot was taken for President early Friday morning, as follows:

Clarke	440½
Wilson	324
Harmon	148
Underwood	117½
Baldwin	22
Marshall	31
Bryan	1
Total Votes in Convention	1094
Necessary to nominate	728

After the ballot, it then being 7.15 Friday morning, the convention adjourned until 4 o'clock Friday afternoon.

Who the nominee will be no man knows. The conservatives and progressives are so evenly balanced that a conservative or progressive candidate cannot receive a two-thirds vote. There must be some lively skirmishing to find a darkhorse candidate upon whom both sides can agree.

That candidate must meet the approval of Bryan, who has whipped the conservatives to a standstill. Governor Wilson and Governor Harmon, the antipodes in the race, seem to be too prominent to win.

Mr. Bryan admits that he cannot be nominated; he has thrown all concealment aside and has decided for Governor Wilson. He may make a speech seconding Wilson's nomination.

This means that Bryan has turned his back on Speaker Clark, and with Bryan possessing the power to veto it, his nomination seems to be out of the question. Governor Marshall seems to be down and out as a dark horse. Senator Kern is being groomed as the dark horse.

Governor Wilson's friends admit that he is over 300 votes shy on a two-thirds majority.

Speaker Clark's friends are nettled and discouraged. New York threw him down hard. The delegation agreed to support its first love, Governor Harmon. The vote was: Harmon, 60; Wilson, 15; Gaynor, 9; Clark, 4; Underwood, 2. Under the unit rule New York's 90 votes were cast for Governor Harmon and until another caucus is held and another candidate agreed upon. This is the tragedy of the Convention.

The great Convention is apparently in a deadlock. How long it will stay deadlocked no man knows.

The all-night session saw a wild demonstration for Clark, lasting an hour and five minutes, and an even wilder one for Wilson. The latter was in two sections, the first coming when New Jersey was reached in the call of States and the second when the Jersey Governor was actually placed in nomination. The two together lasted about an hour and a half.

The huge crowd in the convention hall remained almost unbroken until 1 o'clock Friday morning. Even then only a few persons went home. Until 2 o'clock fully 12,000 were in the hall. Then began a gradual departure. At dawn Friday morning the crowd had been reduced to 4,000 or 5,000, and when adjournment came few persons not actively and directly interested in the contest were still on hand.

After an exceedingly noisy but otherwise orderly all-night session, during which Woodrow Wilson, Champ Clark, Judson Harmon, Oscar Underwood and Thomas Marshall were placed in nomination for the Presidency, the Democratic National Convention came to the stage of balloting at 6.30 o'clock Friday morning.

The vote polled by Clark being less than the two-thirds necessary to nominate, the balloting will have to go on. But the delegates were so tired after the first ballot that they decided to adjourn until 4 o'clock Friday afternoon.

On the first ballot Maryland cast all her 16 votes for Clark, and thus stood true to instructions.

Bryan received one vote from Ohio on the first ballot.

For Vice-President.

The man for Vice-President, of course, depends upon the fight for President. All sections of the country will try to be represented. Among the most prominent are Senator Newlands, of Nevada; former Governor Folk, of Missouri; former Governor David A. Francis, of Missouri; Theodore A. Bell, of California; Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, in the list of Westerners; Mayor Preston, of Baltimore, Senator Culberson, of Texas, and Senator Luke Lea, of Tennessee, among Southern men.

Gov. Simeon E. Baldwin, of Connecticut; Governor Foss, of Massachusetts; Senator Obadiah Gardner, of Maine, and Senator O'Gorman, of New York, are among the Easterners talked of.

The woods are literally full of Vice-Presidential timber, and there is plenty of it in every section.
