THE SABBATH EVE.

BY ANNIE SOUTHCOMB.

The Sabbath eve, love the sound;
To me it always brings
Visions of days that's past and gone
On time's relentless wings.
It calls to mind those happy hours
Of childhood's mirth and glee,
When oft knelt, a joyous child
Beside my mother's knee.

The Sabbath eve, how sweet, how dear
That eve of all the seven;
The very air seems fraught with bliss,
With peace and joy from heaven.
It casts a halo round the hearth
When loved ones gather near;
It calls the absent wanderer home,
It makes that home more dear.

The Sabbath eve, it leaves a charm
Of more than mortal worth,
It calms and soothes the spirit's woes,
It lifts the heart from earth.
It bids us look for joys to come,
To hopes, that ne'er deceive;
To heaven, the Christian's happy home,
And one long Sabbath eve.

STANZAS.

BY J. N. WRIGHT.

A cherub boy in rosy health
Slept in its mother's arms;
She kissed its fair and tender brow,
And lisped its many charms;
Nor did she think as thus she held
Its lovely, infant head,
That ere another sun's decline,
'Twould dwell among the dead!
Ah! Life is short—'tis but a dream—
'Tis but a bubble on the stream.

But thus it was;—the idolized—
The rose so lately given,
Was by the chilly hand of death
Cut down and borne to Heaven,
To deck the brow of Heaven's King
And drink from founts of joy;
With seraphim to chant sweet songs
Of bliss without alloy.
Ah! Life is short—'tis but a dream—
'Tis but a bubble on the stream.

MISCELLANEOUS.

An Abolition at Fault.

"I had a brother-in-law," said Mose Parkins, "who was one of the ravenest maddest, reddert hottest abolitionists you ever see. I liked the pesky critter well enough, and should have been glad to see him when he cum to spend a day fachin' my sister to see me and my wife, if he hadn't 'lowed his tongue to run on so 'bout niggers, and slavery, and the equality of the races, and the duty of overthrowin' the constitution of the United States, and a lot of other things, some of which made me right mad, and the best part of 'em right sick. I puzzlee my brains a good deal to think how I could make him shet up his noisy head 'bout abolition.

"Wall, one time when brother-in-law come over to stay, an idee struck me.—I hired a negro to help me in haying time. He was the biggest, strongest greasiest nigger you ever did see. "Black!" he was blacker than a streak of black cats. add jest as shiny as a new beaver hat. I spoke to him. "Jake," sez I "when you hear the breakfast bell ring, sont you say a word, but you come into the parlor and set down right among the folks and eat your breakfast." The nigger's eyes stuck right out of his head about a feet! "You're jokin', massa." sez he. "Jokin' sez I, I'm as sober as a deacon." "But," sez he, "I shan't have time to wash myself and change my shirt." "So much the better," sez I. Wall—breskfast time cum—and so did Jake, and sot right down long side my brother-in-law. He started but he didn't say word. There warn't no mistake about it Shut your eyes ank you'd know it—for he was loud I tell you.—There was a fust chance to talk abolitionism, but brother-in-law never opened his chrowder-head.

"Jake," sed I, "you be on hand at dinner-time," and he was. He had been workin' in the medder all the forenoon—it was hot as hickory and bilin' as pitch—and—but I leave the rest to our imagination.

Wall—in the arternoon—brother in aw cum up to me madder than a short tailed bull in hornet time.

"Mose," said he, "I want to speak to you."

"Sing it out," sez I.

"I hain't but a few words to say," sez he, "but if that 'ere confounded niggar comes to the table agin while I'm stop pin' here, I'll clear out."

Jake ate his suppor that night in the kitchen, but from that day to this I never heard my brother-inlaw open his head about abolitionism. When the Fugitive Slave bill was passed, I thought he'd let out some, but he didn't, for he knowe'd that Jake was still a workin' on the farm.

Living in Hearts.

It is better to live in hearts than houses. A change of circumstances, or disobliging lanlord may turn one out of a house to which he has formed many pleasing attachments. Removing from place to place, is with many an unavoidable incident of life. But one cannot be expelled from a true and loving heart save by his own fault; nor yet always by that, for affectiod clings tenaciously to its object in spite of ill desert; but go where he will, his home remains in hearts which have learned to love him; the roots of affection are not torn out nor destroyed by such removals, but they remained fixed deep in the heart, clinging still to the image of that object which they are more eager again to clasp.

When one revisits the home of his childhood—the place of his happy abode in life's spring time—pleasant as it is to survey each familiar spot, the house, the garden, the trees, there is the warm grasp of the hand, the melting of the eye, the kind and earnest salutation, a delight which no mere object of nature or art, no delightful cottage or shady rill, nor quiet grove can possibly bestow. To be remembered, to be beloved, to live in hearts, this is one solace amid earthly changes; this is a joy above all the pleasures of scenses and place. We love this spiritual home feeling, the union of heart which death cannot deatroy? for it augurs if there be heart-purity as well as heart affection, an unchanging and imperishable abode in hearts now dear.—Christion Freasury.

GOING TO TEXAS.—An old gentleman seeing a boy who was travelling with his father, mother, sisters and brothers for Texas, crying by the road side, inquired what's the matter, my son?'

'Matter! Fire and d—n stranger! Don't you see mammy there shaking with the ager—dady's gone a fishing—Jim's got every cent of money there is playing brag at a bit antee! Bob Stokes is going on ahead with our Nance! Sal's so how-coms you-so she don'tknow that stick of wood from seven dollars and a half! Every one of the horses is loose? Thar's no meal in the wagon! The skillet's broke! The baby's in a bad fix, and it's half a mile to the creek! and I don't care a d—n if I never see Texas!

Printers.

"The itick of type hath more of might
Than warrior hosts of fortress wall:
And it shall batter towers to dust
That laugh at siege or cannon ball."

Printers have an honorable employment, and one that the first men have filled; an occupation which is, to all who will be true to themselves in its pursuits, the path to honor and eminence. Lord Erkshire was a piinter! Franklin was a printer! Beranger, the great Frence Poet, was a printer! Theirs the great French historian was a printer! Printers have become our state governors they take seats among our senators, and, as leading editors, have wielded pens that controlled the destinies of nations!

EVENING.—There are two periods in the life of man in which the evening hour is peculiarly interesting—in youth and in old age. In youth we love it for its mellow moonlight, its million of stars, its thin, rich and shooting shades, its still serenity; amid those who can commune with our loves, or twine the wreaths of friendship, while there none to bear us witness but the heavens and the spirits that hold their endless Sabbath there—or into the deep bosom of creation spread, abroad like a canopy above us, and hear the waving wings and melting songs of other worlds.—To youth evening is delightful; it accords with the flow of his light spirits, the fervor of his fancy, and the softness of heart. Evening is, also, the delight of virtuous age; it seems an emblem of the tranquil close of busy life—serene, placid, and mild, with the impress of its Creator stamped upon it; it spreads it quiet wings over the grave and seems to promise that all shall be peace beyond it.

A TUMBLE.—A Dutchman thus describes an accident:—"Vonce a loug vile ago I vent intos mine abble orchard, to climb a bear tree to get some beaches to make vrow a plum budding mit; and ven I gits on the tobermost branch I vall from the lowermost limb, mit von leg on both sides of the fence, and like to stove mine outsides in!"
