KILLS SHARK WITH CROWBAR

Great Battle Waged for an Hour Against a Man-Eater Results in Victory.

A man-eating shark up to his eyes in mud and a stranger in the Bronx, was killed near Throggs Neck after everyone within half a mile of him had screamed at least once and missed him with a rock at least twice. David McGowan, an inspector in the Bronx department of sewers, is the amateur toreador who finally sent him winging or flippering into the valley of death.

Mr. McGowan, accompanied by a quartet of pickax wielders and a double sextette of shovelers, was improving the Bronx sewerage facilities when he heard a hoarse cry. Mr. McGowan selected a crowbar he could trust and hurried to where a struggling form was creating a whirlpool. He inserted the crowbar into the huge bulk. The head of an indignant shark appeared, and Mr. McGowan, with four excellently executed handsprings, was back on shore again.

Then began a battle which lasted an hour and endangered the life and property of all who dwell near Weir Creek. Pickaxes were hurled by the drainage pickadores and shovels described parabolas that were interesting, but dangerous.

Finally, when the shark was at the point of death from ennui and exhaustion, Mr. McGowan stepped forward and inflicted the fatal wound. The shark groaned, sighed, whistled, rolled over, kicked once and was no more. He was found to weigh 200 pounds when dragged to the shore and was seven feet long.—New York Herald.

NECESSARY TO FIND TICKET

Bishop Had Good Reason for Making Search for Article That He Had Misplaced.

The distinguished and well-beloved bishop of a certain southern state is so absent-minded that his family is always apprehensive for his welfare when he is away from them.

Not long ago, while making a journey by rail, the bishop was unable to find his ticket when the conductor asked for it.

"Never mind, bishop," said the conductor, who knew him well. "I'll get it on my second round."

However, when the conductor passed through the car again, the ticket was still missing.

"Oh, well, bishop, it will be all right if you never find it!" the conductor assured him.

"No it won't, my friend," contradicted the bishop. "I've got to find that ticket. I want to know where I'm going."—Youth's Companion.

British North Borneo.

The state of British North Borneo is governed by the British North Borneo company, a chartered company, the only one remaining under the British flag. The governor is appointed by the company with the approval of the British secretary of state for the colonies. The population is estimated at 500,000, there being less than 400 whites. United States Consul Hanson, at Sandakan, states that he is informed that within twenty miles of that place are natives who have never seen a white man, and who live by the spear and the blow pipe just as did their ancestors of the tenth century. Mr. Hanson states that elephants and rhinoceroses are so plentiful that they are a nuisance to owners of rubber and cocoanut estates by destroying young trees, and that "the telegraph line across the country is out of commission a third of the time because the elephants rub against the posts and push them down."

French Soldiers' Ways.

A lieutenant describes in Everyman's Belgian Supplement the soldiers of France as "big children." He says that the foundation of the army of the republic is the peasant who has a simplicity that makes him docile to the dictates of discipline and the orders of his superiors. A democracy is growing in the army that did not before exist. "You may," he says, "be as exacting as you like, regarding the divers service duties. For three or six months of rainy winter you may make them work 14 hours a day at earthworks exposed to shot and shell if you treat them as friends; if you trouble about their meals, their footgear, their straw bedding, and above all if you swear at them, when they do impudent things. You can get wonderful results out of them; if you tickle their vanity, they are charmed, they adopt you, they would face death to fetch you if you lay wounded on the field."

Pay of Capital Employees.

Uncle Sam has more than 36,000 employees in Washington to whom he pays an average of $1,135 a year, or a total of about $41,140,000. The highest average salaries are paid to White House employees who get $3,900 a year, and the lowest is paid to employees in the state, war and navy building, averaging $560 a year. Co-operative buying is now practiced by a part of the employees, and it is suggested that this and other co-operative activities might be profitably practiced by the entire army of Uncle Sam's workers in the capital city.

Exceptions.

"Like does not always produce like."

"How do you mean?"

"I mean it is quite possible to sow wild oats and reap a crop of lemons."
