VALUES OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Leaders in Fight Against H. C. L. Judged From Economy and Nourishment Furnished.

Since the high cost of living is still a problem and since New York is one of the two foremost dairy states of the union, the workers in dairying and home economics at the state college at Ithaca, N. Y., are calling renewed attention to the relative cheapness and high food values of dairy products.

To eat these products is to increase the prosperity of the state and to decrease the drain on the pocketbook, because, the folks at Ithaca say, there is a double advantage to the New York housewife, from the viewpoint of economy and of nourishment, if she makes a larger use of them in the family diet.

Not only do these foods contain the growth-promoting substances needed by children, but they are among the cheapest foods of animal origin in respect to protein and lime content. Whole milk, skim-milk, cottage cheese and American cheddar, or common "store" cheese, are good, cheap foods and the workers at Cornell advocate their use.

BETTER TO KEEP GOOD BULLS

Farmer Sold Registered Holstein for $50 That Afterwards Proved to Be Worth $5,000.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When a certain farmer a few years ago sold his registered Holstein bull to his local butcher no records had been made by any of the bull's daughters. Within a year 11 of the daughters freshened at the ages of two and three. Records were then made of milk and butterfat production, and to the astonishment of everybody the average milk production was 14,502 pounds and the average butterfat production was 573 pounds.

But before these records were available the bull was dead and his hide had become leather. Because there were no records, a $5,000 bull had been sold for $50. The cow-testing association tests the dams and daughters, and the bull association makes it practicable to keep a bull until his daughters have been tested. These two associations would have saved that bull.

Registration alone cannot guarantee production. Registered dairy bulls should be backed by good production records. Without record backing they may be very well bred, but there is nothing to prove it.

COVERING FOR CREAM CANS

Great Part of Value Is Lost if Product Is Exposed to Sun While Being Hauled.

A great part of the value of keeping cream cool on the farm and at the station or creamery is lost if the cream is exposed to the direct rays of the sun while being hauled from the farm to the point of sale. Far too few people stop to realize the importance of covering their cream cans when bringing them to town. Expensive jacketed cans are not a necessity to keep the cream cool. In summer weather just an ordinary piece of wet burlap thrown over cans will keep the temperature of the cream as much as 20 degrees below what it would rise to if left uncovered while being transported over the average hauling distance.

DRYING UP COWS NEGLECTED

Some Animals Inclined to Keep Up Heavy Milk Flow Until Calving Time—Care Is Needed.

Some cows are inclined to keep up the heavy milk flow until calving time, and the dairyman is apt to neglect drying them up. Some cows dry themselves while others must be dried up by the milker. Care must be taken or the udder will be injured. The best practice is to cut off the grain feed, giving no grain at all, and in some cases giving less of other feeds. The cow should be milked only once a day for a few days, and then the period lengthened until only once in four or five days. This should be kept up until the flow has entirely ceased.

WINTER BRINGS WOE TO JEWISH CHILDREN

Tattered Jews In Central Europe Must Have Warm Clothes.

More than a million Jewish children throughout Eastern Europe are looking forward with dread to the coming of winter, according to reports received by the American Jewish Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

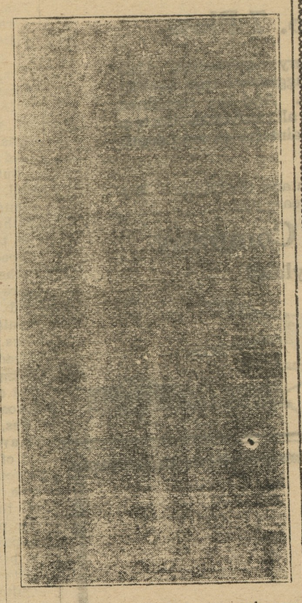
Children do not ordinarily look forward even a few weeks, but hardships have taught these little ones sad maturity, the investigators say. At eight or ten years old, their wizened faces are those of premature age. Their conversation, when they talk at all, which is not often, is like that of grown-ups, having to do solely with their chances of getting food, and their fear of the suffering entailed by severe weather. They almost never cry, for they have learned already that it does no good.

While youngsters in other lands are getting ready for the joys of sledding skating and snow-balling, these Jewish children shiver at the very thought of winter, with a dread that is based upon their vivid memory of the suffering of last year. Wrapped in rags that are often worn to a kind of pulp after four or five years constant wear, with strips of cloth around their feet, or pieces of bark tied to their soles, to serve as shoes, they are almost without any protection whatever against the cold. Yet thousands of them, who are without any other home, are sleeping on the streets, in Poland, and Palestine, and Turkey.

"I was told that it was no uncommon thing to come upon a dead child in the streets in Jerusalem," Miss Rose Klombers, a nurse sent to Palestine by the Zionist organization of America, said upon her return.

These people must be relieved. Only from America can such relief come and come in sufficient quantity to make the slightest impression on conditions in Central Europe. And America must give. Maryland will be given her opportunity during the campaign of the American Jewish War Relief Committee the week of November 23.

THOUSANDS OF JEWISH CHILDREN GO BAREFOOT



With shoes all but an unknown luxury, thousands of children in Poland are forced to go barefooted the year round, according to reports of American Jewish relief workers. This picture was taken in the late winter with the thermometer not far above freezing.

JEWISH HOSPITALS HELPLESS.

Those In War Areas Lack Equipment And Supplies.

Hospitals without doctors, medicines or linen; major operations performed without anesthetics, patients lying at the point of death without fuel to keep them warm, and a great lack of food and bandages, were the outstanding horrors in Dr. Haim I. Davis' description of the medical situation among the Jews of Poland when he spoke before a meeting of prominent men called together by Felix M. Warburg to discuss Jewish relief abroad. Dr. Davis, a well-known psychiatrist of Chicago, was a major in the American Red Cross during the war and is thoroughly familiar with Polish conditions.

"In Poland there are no hospitals or medical facilities according to our understanding of the terms," said Dr. Davis. "There is a great lack of clothing, fuel, medicines, disinfectants and even doctors in Poland. A large percentage of the doctors have been killed in the war and the medical schools have been virtually closed for several years. As a result medical attention is extremely scarce. The Jewish hospitals, once progressive and up-to-date are in a terrible state of demoralization.

"I have seen major operations performed without anesthetics. In addition to the suffering that it entails this has a bad effect on the work of the surgeon. Modern surgical training does not teach speed as an essential if the patient is supposed to be under anesthetic."
