R. M. P. Kenton, of Chestertown, local Delco-Light dealer, returned this week from the Fourth Annual Delco-Light Convention which he attended in Dayton, Ohio, on March 18th to 20th.

He came back displaying boundless enthusiasm over the trip and described fluently the many unique and interesting features which were offered at this convention of the makers and salesmen of Delco-Light, the well-known farm electric plant.

Some of the more striking features says Mr. Kenton, were: First the opening session on Thursday morning when talks were made by R. H. Grant, General Manager, and other officers of the company.

On Thursday afternoon, the whole convention body of some 1500 members were taken on a trip through the great Delco-Light factory, largest of its kind in the world and covering more than a million square feet of floor space.

Mr. Kenton declares that in his opinion electricity is one of the most important forces offered the farmer today and that that opinion was strengthened by what he saw and heard at the tremendous gathering of salesmen of electrical products.
