TERMS—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 50 cents for three months, in advance Single copies 3 cents.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1920

The News heartily endorses the remarks made recently by State Senator Robert Biggs, of Baltimore City, in addressing the City Club. He said "Baltimore doesn't need increased representation in the Legislature." "I believe," he said, "that if Baltimore sent to the Senate four men who knew their jobs, men who were educated and trained for such work; and if Baltimore sent 24 Representatives picked for their intelligence and ability they would get from the Legislature all that Baltimore is entitled to and then some."

T. Allan Goldsborough, candidate for Congress, was in Kent Tuesday and met with a hearty welcome. His position in upholding the 18th Amendment so long as it is a law has the commendation of all good citizens. It is just as much a law as that against thieving or murder and should have the support of not only the officers and courts but every loyal American citizen without regard to his sympathy or antagonism. To work for the enactment or repeal of a law is every man's privilege but outlawry should not be encouraged either on land or sea. The Denton Journal says "Some years ago, at more than one election, the Democratic majority in the First Congressional District was much more than two thousand. The united Democrats of Caroline, and thousands in other counties, believe that a return of the old time prestige of the party is near. Mr. Goldsborough is one of the best campaigners, as well as one of the ablest Democrats, on this side of the Chesapeake. If he is nominated a Democratic sweep is inevitable."

TOWN ELECTION MONDAY

The election of a town commissioner to succeed George R. Rouse who declines a re-election takes place Monday. At the solicitation of many friends and tax-payers Charles N. Satterfield has consented to become a candidate. Mr. Satterfield is one of Chestertown's most progressive and successful young business men. He is a member of the firm of Davis & Satterfield, and is also a member of the Water Board, and Secretary and Treasurer of the Kent Building & Loan Company. He is opposed by Wm. A. Burk, an industrious citizen and an ardent member of the Chestertown Fire Company. Both candidates are Republicans.

A vote will also be taken as to bonding the town for additional fire protection. This question was before the voters in 1918 and defeated. It is high time that our town should seek its own protection, and, if possible, place itself in readiness to return the compliment of help that it has received from its neighbors. No one knows whose property may be the next to go, and when such fire shall occur more property may be destroyed than the proposed equipment would cost. Our town should wake up now to one of its most valuable necessities. It is certainly an imposition to ask our citizens to pull ladders and hose to a fire these days when a motor truck to cost only a small sum could be bought and kept ready for service. Many may have different ideas as to what should be bought, but a majority has voted in committee for the $10,000 equipment, and inasmuch as we believe in majority rule we heartily lend our support to the additional fire equipment Bill. Its final disposition, if passed, will be in the hands of the Town Commissioners and Fire Company.

WHO SAYS "BRING IT BACK?"

A telegram from Easton says the jail there is empty and steps are being taken to make apartments there for use in relieving the crowded housing conditions which prevail in the town.

Another telegram dated Rockville, Md., April 20, says: "For the first time in many years the Rockville jail is without a single prisoner. The last one was discharged on Saturday and since then no one has been committed. When liquor was plentiful the institution was frequently crowded and at all times had anywhere from 10 to 20 or more prisoners. Recently, however, the scarcity of liquor had its effect on business at the jail."

PEOPLE ARE THINKING FOR THEMSELVES, CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATES DISCOVER

Long Contest to Leave Politics to Politicians, Voters Now Demand to Be Shown.

Volstead Act An Issue Raised By People Themselves, Who Insist That It Be Met.

"If he has done nothing else, this man Robertson has at least made the people of the Eastern Shore forget factional political lines and think for themselves."

This is the way one shrewd politician expressed himself the other day about Hilton W. Robertson's campaign for the Democratic nomination from the First Congressional District of Maryland.

But that is not the real story. The fact is that the citizens of the First Congressional District of Maryland, like the citizens of the United States everywhere, are thinking for themselves and Robertson was quick to recognize it.

Not only was the Wicomico business man alert to the signs of the times, but he is the only candidate for Congress on their party ticket with courage enough to meet the issues which the people have "put up."

Met Issue Squarely.

As has already been told in these columns during the past few weeks, Robertson threw his hat into the political arena as a candidate for the Democratic nomination to Congress not because of any particular issue then to be faced, but because the people of the lower counties who knew him as an able and successful business man and as one who had taken a prominent part in the election campaign of Governor Ritchie, regarded him as the sort of man they ought to have as their Representative in Congress—and he responded to their call.

No sooner, however, had Robertson announced his candidacy and started out to meet the voters of the counties where he was not so well known, than he was faced everywhere with the question as to how he stood on the new prohibition enforcement act. People were not asking simply "Is he a good Democrat?" or "Are the leaders for him?" as they used to do before the War, the income tax, the excess profits tax and prohibition enforcement made them realize how intimately the Federal Government can touch every man.

These men of the Eastern Shore, aroused to the fact that their votes meant something to themselves and their families, that their votes were not something to use merely to please some acquaintance or political worker, were asking questions. They wanted to know what Robertson had done that would qualify him for the high position of national legislator. They wanted to know how he stood on the Volstead Act and the drastic features of the prohibition enforcement law. They asked his views on other national policies. They demanded that their questions be answered before they would commit themselves.

Robertson's record was an open book and his friends have been making it public to the readers of this newspaper every week for the past month. They have also been distributing the story in leaflet form to as many voters as they could personally meet. The record clearly justified the candidate in his aspirations.

Then Robertson, being a "good Democrat," declared that upon all national issues of a political nature he would stand upon the platform to be erected by the national Democratic party at San Francisco. He frankly and fully discussed many of these issues with the voters and his views upon economical administration of the Government, taxation, finance and compensation for those who served in the War everywhere have met with popular approval.

"Wet or Dry."

But upon the question of "wet or dry," upon which there was doubt whether the Democratic party would recognize the issue in the national convention, Robertson did not hesitate. He said:

"Among the questions upon which the voters of the Eastern Shore want to know how their next Representative in Congress is going to stand, one has to do with the Volstead prohibition enforcement act.

"In order that there may be no doubt about my position on this question, I now state it as follows: . .

"If I am honored with the vote of the Eastern Shore, I shall work and vote in Congress for a change in the Volstead Act that will permit the manufacture and use of beer, domestic wine, cider and home-made wines and similar beverages.

"I am against the saloon. I believe in temperance in all things. I have never taken a drink of any kind of liquor in my life, but I believe the Volstead Act interferes as seriously with the personal liberties of the people as the saloon interferred with their morals, health and efficiency."

Robertson did not raise the issue. It was presented to him and he met it fairly and squarely. That he has met it to the satisfaction of the plain people his campaign leaves no doubt The following letter, from William H. DeLacy, Mount Pleasant Farm, Centreville, is a sample of the kind of reception the Wicomico man is getting everywhere. Mr. DeLacy writes:

"Having seen the announcement of your candidacy for Congress, and being very much pleased at your open stand before the people by your stated publicity that you favor a change in the Volstead Act so as to permit the manufacture of beer, domestic wines, etc., and the permitting of their use, thereby giving to the people of Maryland the freedom that belongs to them as freemen of America, me and my friends will give you our hearty support."

In a word, the people are awake and Robertson has been meeting them on their own ground. He has demonstrated in this campaign, long before election time, his capacity for knowing what the people want, for dealing directly with them and thus for REPRESENTING them.

That's why the leaders everywhere, as the observant Baltimore newspapers are pointing out, are lending Robertson their aid and encouragement in his fight for the Congressional nomination.
