REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITEE FOR KENT COUNTY, MARYLAND

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for Kent County.

Gentlemen: In compliance with an act of the General Assembly of Maryland passed January 1904 and in harmony with our appointment as Auditors by the Court for Kent County, we have examined the books, accounts, and vouchers of the County Commissioners office. The Board of Education, the County Treasurer's Office and those concerning the Trustees of the Alms House.

This Audit deals chiefly with the Levy of 1918-19 when a rate of $1.25 on the $100.00 was declared for County purposes.

The Assessment books of the County were examined with results as shown in Exhibit No. 7.

We have found the accounts of the County Commissioner's office ond Treasurer's Office in especially good shape and that they have accepted the recommendations of the Auditing Committee as to delinquent and insolvent taxes.

We desire to call attention once more to the Alms House and Farm. From Exhibit No. 4 you will see a total of $5,302.69 in warrants for expenses for the year, which with an average of 20 inmates makes the cost of the maintenance of each inmate $265.18 exclusive of the interest on the value of the buildings and land. In our opinion a more economical plan should be adopted.

Again we would recommend that a Bill enabling the County Commissioners to sell the Almshouse Farm should be presented to this Legislature.

Ring Three

By WILL T. AMES

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The telephone in the east room of the Hanford homestead rang zing-zing-zing. Miss Hanford, who was writing notes, glanced inquiringly at the instrument. The house was on a party line, to be sure; separate wires in that locality were not to be thought of; but Eleanor did not remember having heard a "ring three" call that year.

Zing-zing-zing! Zing-zing-zing! clamored the phone. Miss Hanford was wondering, as ten thousand other people have wondered under similar circumstances, whether she shouldn't really answer, on the chance of the operator having made a mistake, when a man burst into the room.

The man was a total stranger. Eleanor had never seen him before. He was a large man and young, and obviously stark, raving mad; for not only had he made his entrance to the house uninvited and without permission of anybody, but now, without the first word of apology and without even glancing at Miss Hanford, he rushed wildly to the telephone, grabbed the receiver and yelled in a lavishly redundant voice, "Hello!"

To Eleanor's ordinarily calm eyes his entire demeanor was that of a lunatic, perhaps a dangerous one. Without too much fuss she shifted her position so that the drawer with the pistol in it was just beside her right hand.

The intruder, who had flung himself into the none-too-strong windsor chair beside the telephone table and made it creak alarmingly in doing so, appeared still to be utterly unaware of Miss Hanford's presence.

"Hello! Hello!" he bawled, the look of wild anxiety on his countenance becoming still wilder as he appeared to wait, in desperate impatience, a reply that did not come.

Miss Hanford, who was never precipitate, had almost made up her mind to flee and seek the protection of old Mark, the gardener, or Hannah in the kitchen, when a great change came upon the man at the phone. The strained, eager look disappeared, a happy light sprang into his gray eyes, and he smiled broadly. Miss Hanford mentally classified the smile as a grin. "Like a Cheshire cat's" she indignantly concluded.

"Hello! Hello!" He Bawled.

"Sure, this is Les," the uninvited guest was saying into the phone. "Never so glad to hear a human voice in my life, sweetheart! Don't seem as if I could wait another minute to see you. What's that? Yes; didn't know but you'd be up on the two-eighteen. Yes; gets here at five-twenty. You bet; I'll be there. Good-by honey!"

When about half way through this monologue the man twisted about on his chair till he was facing the mistress of the Hanford establishment. Then, still grinning broadly and with the receiver still at his ear, he winked at Eleanor—winked at Miss Eleanor Hanford, if you please! The nerve of him!

Miss Hanford arose, to the full height of her sixty-three majestic inches. She no longer felt any fear of this madman; she was experiencing instead a mighty indignation. Much—anything—might be forgiven in a mere lunatic; but for a vandal like this to violate your privacy, to seize upon your property, to set at defiance all the conventions and safeguards of society—for the purpose of making love over your phone—to some other woman—ugh!

Miss Hanford was all icy calmness as the trespasser, hanging up the receiver, uncoiled his tall length from the trembling windsor chair and stood erect. She gave him no time for a first word—there is no strategy in that.

"May I be privileged," inquired Eleanor, "to know to whom I have the honor of being hostess—and why? It would be interesting to learn what there is about this house to give strangers the impression that it is a hotel or an office building. I do not think it has ever been regarded as a mere public utility before."

"I'm awfully sorry, Miss Hanford—you are Miss Hanford, are you not? But what's the use of that talk—I know you are. I am—honestly—awfully sorry to come tearing in that way, but I'll tell you how it was.

"You see, I've had that little bungalow that sets back in the woods a quarter of a mile above here for a week. I've been away for a good while on that little business overseas and she's been in California, so we haven't seen each other. She got home to New York yesterday and wired that she'd be out here on this afternoon's train. There are two trains, you know, and I put in a telephone call for her at New York. After it was in, and I'd waited half an hour, I realized that if I waited any longer I couldn't meet the two-eighteen, and she might be on that. So I started. When the phone man hooked up the bungalow he told me that this big white house and that stone one down below were the only other subscribers on the line. My number was three.

"Just as I was passing here I heard the ring. Golly! What was I going to do? If I stopped to be polite they'd calmly say, 'Party's hung up; excuse it, please!' by the time I got the receiver down. I know it was rotten manners, but you've got to make allowances for a fellow, sometimes, now haven't you? My name's Grey—Lester Grey; I scribble foolish things that foolish people print sometimes. I hope you'll pardon my headlong intrusion."

Miss Eleanor Hanford with all her dignity and all her responsibility as a woman of position and not a little wealth was, as a matter of fact, just a mere girl. And this big, utterly natural, blundering boy with the marks of overseas still on him, was good to look upon. Somehow it wasn't the ingenuous impropriety—quite shocking in itself—of his receiving his sweetheart in a lonely bachelor bungalow that made Eleanor feel a new and different kind of indignation toward him. Away down in her secret heart she knew that it was because there was a sweetheart at all.

"Oh, very well," she laughed—for, of course, under this new circumstance, being a woman, she could no longer show indignation of any sort lest it be construed in a certain way—"if you put your defense on the ground of temporary aberration, there is nothing else to do but pardon you, I suppose."

Grey should have gone away then. Of course he should. A young man in his peculiar position would be doing very well, you'd think to get out of the situation without complicating it further. But the more he looked at this marchionesslike little person the more he didn't want to. The only thing he could think of to say, however, was:

"May I not bring her to see you, Miss Hanford?"

If looks could kill, Lester Grey should have been at least a serious casualty. "Bring whom, pray, Mr. Grey?" Eleanor inquired chillily, with her eyebrows a quarter of an inch higher than normal.

"My mother, of course."

Whisper: Secrets: Just between you and me: There was the gladdest little thrill that ever was, right through the middle of Eleanor's heart, as she said—very nearly gasped—"Why, I should be positively delighted."

MAJOR'S RELIEF CAME FIRST

Willing to Admit Sam Had a Grievance, but He Had Served the Longer Term.

A major in a stevedore regiment employed one of his men to take care of his horses and do little chores around the yard. One day Sam came into the major's office and he was some agitated man. After he had saluted, he exclaimed:

"Major, I want to be relieved from dis hyar job right now!"

The major asked him why he didn't want the job any more.

"Major, that job is good enuff, but I just can't seem to get along with yo' all's wife. Seems every time I goes down to that thar house she puts me to doin' all kinds of chambermaid's work, and a-naggin' at me all a ther time, too."

Then it was the major's turn. "Sam, I've been living with that woman for thirty-odd years now, and if there is going to be anyone relieved, it's going to be me."—Judge.

Not a Square Deal.

My little cousin, Bobby, five, came crying to his mother:

"I don't like the little boy next door; he hit me."

"Well," said his mother, "I wouldn't cry. Why didn't you hit him back?"

Bobby thought for a moment, then said:

"I did," and went away still sobbing. In a few minutes he was back.

"But, mother—"

"Yes, Bobby?"

"When he hit me, he hit me, and when I hit him, I missed him."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Why Teddy Left.

As the Sunday school teacher was entering the classroom she saw a little girl and her small brother leaving in great haste.

"Why, Anna," she exclaimed in surprise, "you aren't going home?"

"Please, Miss Jones, we've got to go," said Anna, in distress; "Freddie's swallowed his collection."

Munchausen Outclassed.

"I suppose you meet a great many eccentric characters in Washington."

"Oh, yes. You can hardly believe the stories you hear about some of those persons."

"No?"

"I was once introduced to a man who was said to read every issue of the Congressional Record from cover to cover."

ORDER OF PUBLICATION

Jesse Hicks vs. Mary Hicks

In the Circuit Court for Kent County, In Equity. No. 2088.

The object of the Bill is to procure a Divorce a Vinculo Matrimonii from the said Mary Hicks.

The Bill states:

First — That sometime during the month of August, 1916, he was married to his wife, Mary Hicks, at Georgetown, Kent County, Maryland, with whom he resided until June, 1917.

Third—And that ever since their said marriage, your Orator has behaved himself as a faithful and affectionate husband towards the said Mary Hicks.

Fourth—That the said Mary Hicks at divers times and places has committed the crime of Adultry with persons unknown to your Orator and that your Orator has not lived or co-habited with her since he discovered the said adultries.

Fifth—That your Orator has been a resident of Kent County, State of Maryland, for more than two years last passed and that the said Mary Hicks is now a resident of the City of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania; and that no children have been born to them as a result of their marriage.

It is thereupon this 7th day of April, 1920, ordered by the Circuit Court of Kent County in Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Kent County, once in each of four successive weeks before the 10th day of May next, giving notice to the said Mary Hicks, non-resident defendant, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by Solicitor on or before the 28th day of May next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.
