Fagged Out

AFTER a hard day in the field with the temperature up in the nineties and then milking 20 to 30 cows, a man may not cave in as this boy has done, but he's certainly often near doing it.

The Empire is doing a lot to correct this and keep the young man on the farm, and the best part of it is it's making money for his dad at the same time. Milking the Empire way is the sure way to better dairying.

It cuts the time, the cost and the drudgery out of milk production.

Empire Teat Cups have a gentle soothing action that coaxes the cows to let down easily and give more milk. If you are without an Empire you're paying for it. Better investigate!

BACK HURT ALL THE TIME

Mrs. Hill Says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Removed The Cause.

Knoxville, Tenn.—"My back hurt me all the time, I was all run down, could not eat and my head bothered me, all caused by female trouble. I was three years with these troubles and doctors did me no good. Your medicine helped my sister so she advised me to take it. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Liver Pills and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and now I am well, can eat heartily and work. I give you my thanks for your great medicines. You may publish my letter and I will tell everyone what your medicines did for me."—MRS. PEARL HILL, 418 Jacksboro St., Knoxvill , Tennessee.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

IN THE TWILIGHT

By GEORGE E. COBB

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

It was a strange, a terrifying and a perilous position, that in which Wylie Burton found himself, and after its climax the details of the peculiar environment impressed themselves upon his mind during all his life.

He had entered an upper floor of a large mercantile building and was busy adjusting a disputed account with the cashier of a wholesale millinery firm, when there rang out the echoing ominous cry of:

"Fire!"

In an instant all was alarm and confusion. Shouts above and below increased and dense smoke filled the building. There was a rush for the windows and fire escapes and Burton was bustled about in the vortex of madly crowding men and shrieking women and girls. He ran into a hallway to find that the elevators had stopped running, the stairway impassable.

He noted the figure of a woman rushing back from the suffocating smoke into a large room. He followed her, thinking she might be more familiar with the structure than himself. He saw her lift up the sash of a broad window looking out upon the street. She strained her gaze below and then sprang to the sill, amid her terror designing a leap to destruction.

"Don't think of that!" cried Burton, reaching her side and drawing her back from the abyss she so desperately courted. "See! Escape is impossible that way."

Wylie Burton thrilled. She was a young woman past twenty with a delicate refined face, presenting rather soulfulness than mere beauty. It was the helpless appealing expression of her eyes that somehow lifted his thoughts beyond fear or danger. She spoke not, amid perfect trustfulness. Her eyes quivered, drooped, and, as if reading in his own power, strength, sacrifice, with a gentle sigh she drew closer to his protecting arm and buried her face at his breast like a frightened child shutting out some dread-inspiring spectacle.

A sense of power, patience, heroism caused Wylie Burton to feel that the charge of a precious human life was his. He glanced past the window sill. The street below was a chaos of fire engines, scaling ladders and a surging mass of humanity. He freed one hand and waved it, shouting wildly. There came a reponsive call and he knew that he was seen. Then he pityingly, almost tenderly, gazed down at the fair head pillowed so trustingly on his breast. The girl's hands clasped his shoulders, but the terror had died out and she was calm, resigned, in his companionship appearing to feel that he was her refuge of hope and security. A great breath of relief swept Burton's lips as the top of a ladder from below shattered a great pane of glass.

"They are coming to our rescue," he spoke soothingly. Fearless eyes met his own, her lips quivered as if eager to frame some message of gratitude, then they grazed his cheek, only once, softly, tenderly, and it seemed to him he would brave any peril to continue to hold that clinging form in his embrace.

A helmeted fireman appeared and lifted the girl through the sashless aperture. He instructed Burton to wait until they were near the ground and then make his own descent. There was but one thought in the mind of the latter—of the being he had met, loved as in a hypnotic flash, and parted from all within a few moments. She had disappeared in the crowd, however, and inquiry then and for days succeeding failed to establish her whereabouts or identity.

"She was probably some country buyer," surmised one of the salesmen, "and was caught in the fire before she had made any purchases."

At the end of a year Wylie Burton was still impressed with the recollection of the girl of the terrible, yet precious, vital moments when he expected to perish with her.

His business took him half way across the state several times a year, and because train service was poor he had started to walk from Wolverton to Espay, towns only four miles apart. He had accomplished over half the distance when he came upon a farmer's lad seated on a log and holding a bandbox on his knees.

"Oh, say, mister!" he spoke. "You aren't going to Espay, are you?"

"Why, yes," assented Burton.

"Well, maybe you can do something for me. See this bandbox? Well, it holds a lady's hat. I found it by the roadside where it had probably fallen from some automobile. This label on it shows that it came from Miss Forsythe's millinery store at Espay. Would you mind delivering it there?"

"I will be glad to," replied Burton, and started on his way with it to locate a neat little millinery establishment. It was just getting on toward dusk. In the twilight haze a lady approached as he entered.

"I have brought some property which I think came from here," he began, and paused.

And she, too. In utter silence they stood, two souls hovering upon the brink of a marvelous revelation. For a year her picture only had filled his mind, for a year every waking hour she had longed to meet once again the man who had faced death with her.

And eye to eye—soul to soul—they stood, realizing each that fate should part them no more.

DO IT NOW

A little horse sense mixed with the use of Automobiles is productive of the best results.

For the want of a nail the shoe was lost;
For the want of a shoe the horse was lost;
For the want of a horse the rider was lost;

Important Notice

All fertilizers and lime has advanced. I have 1000 tons lime bought at the old price and will sell at the old price until August 1st unless sold out before.

The farmers are my friends and my "farmers friend" lime is a real friend of his. It will grow you more to the round dollar than any commercial fertilizer you can put your money in. I can refer you to real farmers who will verify this statement.

The advance in fertilizers and lime seems to the farmers unjust and they in justice to themselves must resort to some method of reducing their expenses in order to exist.

I will have no trouble to sell this lime at the old price and those who do not act quickly will surely pay more later. Write me today. Its a wheat grower and a labor saver.

Put up in 125 pound bags. Goes through your wheat drill.
