New Light On Cause of Asthma and Hay Fever

The medical world has been grouping about in the dark for years in an effort to find a "cure" for Asthma and Hay Fever.

These two ailments are undoubtedly among the most annoying and troublesome ailments man or woman can have.

During recent years, however, clinical experience has proven the fact that Asthma and Hay Fever have their seat of origin in the nerves that emanate from the spine, and the cure of course lies in correcting the trouble from its source.

For every effect (ailment) there must be a cause, and chiropractic is most successful because it strikes at the very source of trouble and removes the cause, so that the effect (ailment) disappears.

William Bright, of Worton, Kent county, suffered with Asthma for a long time. Medicine only seemed to aggravate the trouble, and he found himself on the decline. A friend who had just been cured of a similar ailment took him to Dr. Dill, the Chiropractor, and after a series of Special Adjustments, he was completely restored to health and is now well and strong and advises all who are sick to try Chiropractic.

If you have been ailing talk to someone who has given Chiropractic a fair trial, and you will hear a story of wonderful recovery.

Historic Sassafras Forms Kent-Cecil Boundary Line

Straight, Beautiful River Originally Named After Indian Tribe By Captain John Smith In 1609—Is Playground For Many.

Dividing Cecil from Kent county is the Sassafras river, and it is one of the straightest lines of division in the State. So straight and so beautiful that when Capt. John Smith journeyed to the mouth of the Susquehanna and planted his flag upon Palmers in the name of his king in 1609 he returned down by the Eastern Shore of what is now Cecil county to the mouth of the Sassafras.

As he turned around Groves Point, there stretched away before him miles of blue water. He landed a couple miles up the stream and visited an Indian village at the point now known as Turner's Creek. The name of this tribe was the Tockwogh, and in honor of his visit to them he wrote his map "this is Tockwogn river."

Tribe Peace-Loving.

The Tockwogs were part of the family of the Susquehannocks, the peace-loving and magnificent specimens that so pleased the first explorer that he described them as "God-like men." Tockwogh river remained the name of this stream until the advent of the Calverts, in 1634, when, for some reasons not known, the title of Sassafras river was inflicted upon one of the most beautiful streams of Maryland.

Kent county, in those early days, included about everything Lord Baltimore could not see on the east side of the Bay. When Cecil county was partitioned from Kent, in 1674, the line was several miles deeper into Kent than it is now, so that, in 1692, when there was established the thirty parishes, St. Stephen's Church was one of them. It was then in Cecil, and always has been. It was dedicated in 1706, and the little settlement of Earleville, in which St. Stephen's is located, dates its history from that time. St. Stephen's has been rebuilt so often that it bears little resemblance to the original structure.

On the Kent county side of the Sassafras, and in 1692 a part of Cecil parishes was created at Shrewsbury, and the construction of the old church close to the mouth of the Sassafras was also begun at this time. Shrewsbury Church still retains its original lines and is one of the favorite spots for writers of local history who are searching for color.

It was in 1706 that the Sassafras became the boundry between the two counties and Cecil lost to Kent one of her famous reminders. The Sassafras cuts the Eastern Shore, and the traveler going up or down must cross it.

Ferry Started Early.

Twelve miles from its mouth, on the Cecil side of the river, is Fredericktown; on the Kent side, Georgetown. From the earliest days of the Eastern Shore settlement this has been the crossing of the stream. No one seems to know just when a public ferry was established between these points, but there is every reason to believe that its establishment was somewhere in the neighborhood of 1645-50. It had become so important by 1665 that homes had begun to spring up on both sides of the river and extending toward both the source and mouth.

Near Earleville, in Cecil county, the estate of Woodlawn was patented by William Ward in 1686, and the colonial mansion built by him at that time still remains. Georgetown was chartered and officially laid out in 1736.

Prior to Georgetown, Shrewsbury Town was created in 1684. This was down near Turner's Creek, and it was inaccessible and off the beatten track, so Shrewsbury Town joined in that list of Eastern Shore mistaken locations and its epitaph is "the town that was and is not."

Early in 1800 the two towns at the crossing—Fredericktown and Georgetown—had reached their zenith, and were of so much importance that Admiral Cockburn journeyed up the Sassafras, and one dark night, in the war between England and the United States (1812-14), lighted the heavens with the burning of the two towns. The destruction was almost complete but there was written a page in Eastenr Shore history that night.

Miss Kitty Knight absolutely refused to allow her home to be burned and defied the whole English army to set a match to her property. When the admiral heard of her defiant attitude, he paid a personal call upon Miss Knight and complimented her on her bravery and issued the order that her property should be respected.

Homes Near Sassafras

Kitty Knight's home is but one of scores built in the early days that are within a short distance of the Sassafras. The Bohemia Manor, in Cecil county, and the Shrewsbury parish, in Kent, contain many present day homes that were erected prior to 1700.

Down at the mouth of the Sassafras, opposite Groves Point, is Betterton, the only town of modern origin beside the Sassafras. It is 12 miles from the State road bridge at Georgetown, and steamers traveling from Baltimore to Georgetown pass within a few hundred feet of Betterton depends for its existence upon the fish and wild fowl from the Sassafras and Chesapeake Bay and upon its being the most popular bay resort in Maryland.

Just now Betterton has in preparation a pageant that will tell the story of the Sassafras river and the growth of that town. There is no river in Maryland that presents a more attractive playground for those who love boating than the Sassafras. It
