CROUP

WHAT TO DO QUICK

Croup steals into children's throats in the dead of night—only the sniffling, coughing, running nose warn you ahead of time.

Why not give your children the protection of Goff's Quick-Action Cough Syrup—a treatment that has been passed down from generation to generation, because nothing else does its work quite so well. A dose at bedtime nearly always prevents croup coming on.

Goff's gets to the seat of the trouble—soothes the inflamed membranes—brings up the phlegm—helps to fight the germs. It is recommended to prevent colds and coughs developing into pneumonia, as well as for croup and whooping cough. For old, for young, and for in-between.

Goff's Quick-Action Cough Syrup contains absolutely NO CHLOROFORM NO DOPE. Don't take chances with your loved ones. Goff's is safe, quick-acting, and pleasant.

Mrs. C. J. Boyer, of Weissport, Pa., states enthusiastically: "I am never without your Cough Syrup. It cured my little boy of stubborn cough that lasted for four weeks. One bottle cured it entirely. Goff's Cough Syrup I discovered, did not constipate him and contains no dope."

COLORED LIGHTS HELP OPERATOR CHECK UP CALLS

Every Little Twinkle Has A Meaning All Its Own To Girls At Board.

How is it that telephone operators know at once if you are calling from a public pay station or from an individual line or party line?

In a telephone exchange every little twinkle has a meaning all its own and the type of service is designated to the operator by a symbol on the lamp cap that covers the line lamp which lights when the call is made.

Generally speaking, the plain white lamp cap is used for the type of service which is in a majority and, for that reason, the signals differ in different sections of the country. In most places a green lamp indicates that the party is calling up from a pay station. A white lamp cap might mean an individual line and a white lamp cap with a black cross might signify party line service.

On the keyboards and cord shelves of the switchboard the red, white and green lamps correspond to the color of the cords. These lamps have nothing to do with the class of service, but are used to assist the operator in associating the cord signals with the proper pair of cords.

"IS JAIL A RESIDENCE?" BAFFLES COMMISSIONERS

Should a county jail be considered a residence or an office is a question which is perplexing the Nebraska Utilities Commission.

Certainly the sheriff would consider the jail a place of business, for it serves as his headquarters during the time he is holding his office. On the other hand, do the prisoners regard their cells as homes? The frequency with which some prisoners get back in jail after once they get out might seem to indicate that they hunger for the joys of home life, but the Nebraska Commission is not as yet convinced that the county jail is entitled to a residence telephone rate.

Among the forty-eight States that make up the United States of America, there are eight, each of which has more telephones than the entire Republic of France.

The DAIRY

CONSUMER ENTITLED TO ALL BUTTERFAT

Average milk, even from Holsteins, contains close to 4 per cent butterfat. In most places it is legal to sell milk that has been robbed of at least one-fourth of its cream. Presuming it to be legal, the question arises, is it moral? We see the disastrous results that follow from trying to raise calves on milk that has been separated from its cream. Three per cent milk means that this milk has been unbalanced as a food by removing one of its most important constituents. Milk is the principal food for children and the lives of many babies depend upon it. It is morally wrong to steal from any one, but what shall we say of the person who systematically removes part of the cream from milk that babies are depending upon for their health or their lives?

In practical inspection the standard of butterfat for each dairy herd should be established by making frequent herd tests and the vendors of milk should be held to strict accountability on this basis. The public pays the price that is asked and is entitled to pure milk that has not been unbalanced by robbing it of part of its cream. The practice that has become altogether too general among dairymen in large cities of separating part of the cream from the night's milk and mixing what is left with the whole morning's milk, to sell to patrons, is morally wrong and it should be made legally so, with appropriate penalties. —George H. Glover, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins, Colorado.

Should Be Careful When Using Milking Machine

It is especially common for cows to hold up their milk in the latter part of the lactation period, or when they are giving only a small quantity of milk. It is at this time that a little care and a little patience will make machine milking a success, while if the machine it put on the cow and operated as though the cows were inanimate, the cows may hold up their milk and, therefore, dry up earlier than they should. Some may even get swollen and diseased udders.

The milker should always see that the milk is given down before the milking machine it attached, and to rub the udders and fondle with them is excellent. It should always be practiced before the machine is attached, especially with cows that are inclined to hold up their milk.

Heavy milkers as a rule give down their milk immediately when preparations for milking are being made. Some give down their milk when they hear the milking machine start. But a cow that is not a full milker does not give down her milk so readily. No milking machine, nor any other artificial force, can draw the milk from a cow if she "wills" to hold her milk, and there is no need of attaching the machine if the cow does not give down her milk.—C. Larsen, South Dakota College of Agriculture.

Keeping Milk Record to Eliminate Low Producer

Money can be lost in dairying almost as fast as in most other farm activities, and nobody wants to milk cows for a pastime. The average dairy cow in North Dakota produces about 137 pounds of butterfat, and a herd of cows which averages below this figure is almost sure to return a loss to the owner.

The low average herd may contain several animals that would return a profit if the low producers were eliminated. The high average herd might be capable of a much higher and more profitable return if the low producers were replaced.

The individual farmer can tell only in a general way which are the high-producing cows and which are the low ones. To get specific information on each herd and each individual in the herd, cow testing associations are organized by a group of farmers banding together and keeping milk records.

Dairying Notes

Boarder cows are most profitable as dead cows.

* * *

Provide water, grain and hay for the fall-born calves.

* * *

Milk scales tell you more accurately than the butcher which cows to cull from the herd.

* * *

All utensils should be rinsed with lukewarm water to remove the milk and then washed with hot water and a washing compound and rinsed.

* * *

Plenty of fresh water and clean utensils are found in every recipe for healthy calves.

* * *

A cotton filter makes the best strainer for the farmer who is really particular about the bacteria count in his milk, for it is inexpensive and can be thrown away after use.

* * *

Do not wait until the cows are off the pasture to begin feeding grain. Feed grain to keep the cows up in their milk whether they are on pasture or not, if they need the grain.

Tree "Blazes" Lasting

The forest service says that the blazes which are put in trees never grow out, provided that the blaze is put in properly. One of the members of the forest service cites an instance of a blaze that was made in 1861 and states that it is possible to stand 15 feet from this blaze and distinguish it clearly.
