Farmer's Pay Check Cut Down By Waste in Feed

Wasteful feeding, rather than cost of feed, is limiting the profit in dairying and poultry raising, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. "Feed a good feed but don't waste it," is the slogan suggested for the dairyman or poultryman who would go forward in his business, rather than backwards.

"An investigation of the farmer's feeding problems has shown that there is a lamentable waste of good feed going on in nearly every barn in the country," the Institute states. "The same dairyman or poultryman who complains about a difference of five cents a sack between two feeds, will waste many times that amount through his methods of feeding.

"Here is a typical illustration. If a farmer is feeding 20 cows 10 pounds of food apiece a day, he requires 200 pounds of feed. And if feed costs him 2¾ cents per pound, his daily cost of feed is $5.50. But if instead of feeding each cow exactly 10 pounds per day, he guesses at the weight by the scoop-shovel methods, he is likely to give the 20 cows 250 pounds, or 12½ pounds apiece, and his feed bill becomes $6.87 instead of $5.50. Now, supposing that at this rate of cost the dairyman finds his operations are not sufficiently profitable, the first thought to come into his mind is to buy a cheaper feed. So instead of buying a feed that costs him $2.75 a sack, or $55.00 a ton, he buys a feed that costs only $2.25 or $45.00 a ton. He then proceeds to feed his cows 250 pounds a day by the guess-the-weight method and his feed bill is $5.62 per day. This is more than the good feed would have cost if properly used, and the cows, getting the lower grade of feed, fall off in milk production, so that the farmer can't save on the feed bill enough to overcome the loss on his milk check. This should prove to any dairyman that it is more profitable to feed 200 pounds of good feed at a daily cost of $5.50 and get $15.00 worth of milk, than to feed 250 pounds of cheaper grade at $5.62 and get only $10.00 or $12.00 worth of milk.

Farm accounts, accurately and carefully kept, are the only means the dairyman has to keep tab on his business, and will pay very good wages to those who keep them, according to the Institute. The dairyman or poultryman should aim to produce just as economically as possible so that even if he sells at a low price he can still make a fair income, but he cannot do this unless he knows what his actual costs are and the points where these may be shifted with a view of increasing production and decreasing labor and investment costs on each can of milk or dozen of eggs produced. Six farmers who, three years ago, started to lower costs by keeping simple cost records of their poultry, not only increased their egg yield by an average of 19 eggs per hen, but also increased each farmer's income $224.00 a year as pay for the time put in keeping records.
