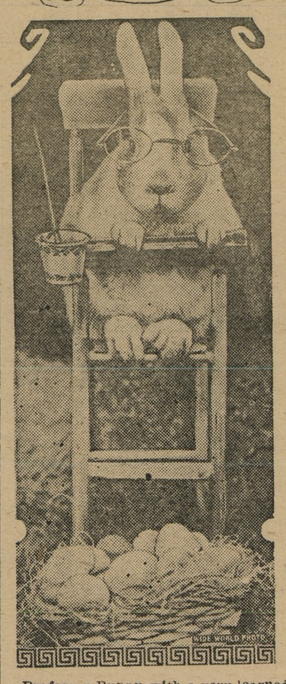
Learned Opinion



Professor Bunny, with a very learned air, discusses a problem in Calculus. He explains that the reason why people eat colored Easter eggs on Easter is because it is Easter.

EGG IN HIGH PLACE AS SACRED EMBLEM

Stood for Renovation of Mankind After Deluge.

One writer says: "Eggs were held by the Egyptians as a sacred emblem of the renovation of mankind after the deluge. The Jews adopted it to suit the circumstancees of their history." In Italy, Spain and Provence, where so many pre-Christian superstitions are retained, eggs have long figured in the celebration at the time of the vernal equinox and sports with eggs have been indulged in for centuries. This common occurrence of the egg in pagan, Jewish and Christian observances gives the symbolism far more significance than if it were only found in one place, time or faith.

A game played among the Christian children of Mesopotamia consists in striking colored eggs against one another. The egg that breaks first is won by the owner of the egg that struck it. Immediately another egg is pitted against the winning egg and thus the game goes on for "keeps" until the last remaining egg wins all the others.

Resurrection

Easter morn in radiant glory
Dawneth o'er the earth again!
Bursting blossoms tell the story
O'er and o'er in glad refrain.
From their prison
Have they risen;
Resurrection are they singing,
Praise to their Creator bringing.

Lord of Easter, let thy glory
Ease our sorrowing hearts of pain!
O'er and o'er the wondrous story
May we sing in glad refrain:
Christ is risen
From death's prison.
Light from darkness Faith is bringing;
Joy and hope are now upspringing.
—Helen Elizabeth Coolidge, in the Ohio Farmer.

The Christian Easter

In the Christian church Easter day is a festival observed in commemoration of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, occurring on Sunday, the third day after His crucifixion (Good Friday), and ending the penitential forty days of Lent, which begins on Ash Wednesday. It answers to Pascha or Passover of the Hebrews, and many nations still give it this name. The Passover is a feast of the Jews commemorating their escape from Egypt, when God, smiting the first born of the Egyptians, passed over the houses of the Israelites which were marked with the blood of the paschal lamb. Our ancient ancestors celebrated this festival in April of each year, which was called Eoster monath. Some authorities record Christ's resurrection as having taken place on April 9, 30 A. D.

EASTER is the appointed time of Resurrection—of Restoration—of the spiritual qualities that have become blurred and marred in the battle with the material.

Faith that whatever is, is best—Faith in the knowledge that nothing dies will wipe away the blinding tears and let the weeping women see that the stones are rolled away from their sepulchers, and their happiness lives—perhaps in the joy of another—perhaps in another way—but lives—Resurrected.

ANIMAL'S IDEA

"It's perfectly absurd," roared the lion. "Yes, it surely is absurd."

The Lioness.

"It's utterly absurd," roared the lioness.

"It's too ridiculous for words," said the leopard.

"I think it is nonsense," said the panther.

"It's so silly," said the puma.

"It's the most foolish thing of which I have ever heard," said the tiger.

"I've an idea," said the lion, roaring.

"So have I," said the lioness, roaring, too.

"I believe I have one," said the leopard.

And one by one, the panther, the puma and the tiger each said that they had an idea, too.

"I wonder," roared the lion, "if we all have different ideas or if we have the same one.

"I wonder that."

And that set all the animals to wondering if they each had a different idea or if each of them had thought of the same thing.

"The only way to find out is for each of us to give his or her idea," said the lioness.

"That's right," said the lion.

"That's so," said the leopard.

"That's the truth," said the panther.

"The only way," said the tiger.

"That's right," they all agreed, roaring and growling.

So they each gave his or her idea, and they each found that the idea was the same.

They had heard the zoo people say that the cost of food was going up and they had heard that everyone talked of the high cost of living, which meant it was hard to pay such big prices for meat and other things for meals.

"Well, each animal had an idea, as each had said, and each idea of all those animals was the same.

"Yes," said the lioness, "if they complain of the cost of feeding us at any time we can tell them we will leave their zoo and go out to hunt for ourselves.

"We don't have to pay for the food we can get. We hunt for it and we find it and we eat it, we do." And she roared as she thought of it.

"Yes," said the panther, "it is senseless to talk of the high cost of food in the zoo when every one of us knows that we could go out and do our own marketing tomorrow—that is after a journey a little distance to where it was a bit wild and free—and then the prices and money wouldn't bother us."

And they all agreed that people were foolish who worried about such things!

"We will leave if they think we are an expense," said the lion.

"We don't care about staying if that is the way they feel about it," said the lioness.

"We'd rather go, anyway," she said.

"We would," said the leopard.

"Indeed we would," said the panther.

"I would leave any time," said the puma.

"So would I," said the tiger.

So they all agreed that it was foolish of the zoo people to complain about how much their animal guests cost them in food, when all the guests would be quite willing to leave.

"That's Right," Said the Lion.

If they were staying and showing what they were like to the visitors, and were letting others know about them and their ways so that they were becoming better informed about animals—then—all very well.

But they needn't complain about any high prices—for they were guests, many of them, who were not staying on completely and entirely of their own free will and accord!

That was what these animals thought.

Excusable

"Willie, why is your deportment so poor in school?"

"Well, there's nothing but girls all around me."
