The Solution Is Unselfishness

Meats are still higher than they were during the war. Not that the farmer gets more for his lambs and wool, and cows, and poultry, but the cost of handling them are greater and this cost must be added to the consumer's price in order for the high wages to continue.

Many angles are presented, but the solution to most of the troubles of either the farmer or the manufacturer or the business man lies with the individual.

Marshall Field, of Chicago, startled the world years ago when he sold a lot near his department store to a competitor. He realized that the larger and better the stores near him the more people would be attracted there, his store getting the benefit. This proved sound as time has shown.

Unselfishness pays even in business, and the Rotary Club has a creed of consideration even for competitors.

NEW RADIO HOUR ATTRACTS SPORT FANS

Announced by no less a personage than Graham McNamee, the radio hour of the Coca-Cola Topnotchers is said to be attracting large numbers of sport fans to Station WRC every Wednesday evening at 9.30 p.m.

Each week a different sport celebrity is introduced to the radio audience by Grantland Rice, the noted New York sports editor, and while the unusual all-string dance music of the Coca-Cola Topnotchers is halted, giving the 31 musicians a chance to pause and refresh themselves, the liveliest sport topics of the day are discussed in a way that has made a real sporting event of these Wednesday programs.

Recently interviewed, Carrol C. Steward, President of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Easton,said that judging by the public response to the Coca-Cola Topnotchers, Graham McNamee feels that his Wednesday evening audiences are growing as large as any of those he has addressed when covering the biggest sporting events.

Teh program originates in the New York Studios of the National Broadcasting Company.

The Modern Funeral

The methods and systems in vogue a few years ago, and still adhered to by many, are no longer applicable. In this age and generation a better understanding of the duties of the funeral director has changed the old order. One of the most difficult problems confronting the modern funeral director will be solved when the public realizes that SERVICE is the principal, and in fact, only commodity which we have to offer.

The casket and funeral appurtenances are negligible, or practically so, requiring little or no expense and, in the matter of expense, consist only with the costs of production.

Service is the main consideration—the care and disposition of the body of the one that has passed on. Knowledge and ability and a readiness to relieve the burden of those who are left to mourn.

FIRST LEAVENED BREAD?

The discovery of the art of leavening bread is attributed to Egyptians. It needs no stretch of the imagination to suppose that some attendant mixed up a batter of wheat and water, as was the custom in ancient times, and instead of immediately proceeding to dry or bake out this material, had allowed it to stand overnight. The next morning the attendant was undoubtedly alarmed to note that the batter was actively fermenting, had increased in size, was full of bubbles, and had a different taste and aroma. However, probably acting under the impulse of trying to cover up his neglect, he went ahead and baked with the fermented batter. Since leavened dough produces a much more palatable bread, astonishment and delight must have greeted this discovery.

Too Much for Bobbie

Bobbie, not yet two years old, the adored of a circle of relatives, every one of whom insists on calling him an individual name which he must recite many times a day, met a new aunt. After she had heard the list and seen his busy pranks she said: "Well, you're my little incorrigible." Bobbie looked uncertain but stored the word away for future need.

Next day he was called on for his recital. "Bobbie is Gannie's what?" "Man." "Aunt Vi's what?" "Lazybones." "Daddy's what?" "Humbug." "And Aunt Marcia's what?" With a brilliant smile and his southern accent he answered triumphantly: "Co'n-bread."—Indianapolis News.

Simple

A man was telling a girl about a motor car trip from which he had just returned. The trip was made during a spell of very rainy weather and high waters.

"I arrived about four o'clock in the afternoon at a very swollen river, and it was necessary that I should cross," he said. "No bridge was within miles. Night was approaching, but I knew it would be madness for me to drive my car into the rushing stream."

"Well, what did you do?" inquired the girl.

"Oh, I sat in my machine and thought it over."—London Tit-Bits.

Let There Be Light

Bill, four years old, asked his father to leave the light burning in the bathroom at night.

"No, son, we can't have that," the father replied. "The light bill would run too high."

Bill pondered a moment, then came a juvenile solution of the problem.

"That's easy," the youngster suggested. "Just take out the bulb!"

Keep Away Flies And Mosquitoes

Flies breed in filth...they fly from filth to food; they carry disease germs from sick to well; they contaminate milk, butter, meat—everything they touch — the baby's food and yours; they spread the germs of diarrhea and dysentary; of typhoid or tuberculosis.

Mosquitoes cause sleepless, restless nights by their buzzing and biting, they frazzle the nerves and wear down the resistence of their victims, to disease. The murderous members of the tribe do all of these things and in addition inject into the blood of their victims the germs of breakbone fever, of malaria and of the deadly yellow fever. (Fortunately, few, if any, of the yellow fever variety include Maryland in their itineraries).

Because these things are as they are, action against the invaders is urged by the Director of the State Department of Health, Dr. R. H. Riley, as follow:

1. Get rid of the breeding places of both flies and mosquitoes.
2. Flies breed in manure. Don't allow manure to accumulate. It should be spread out at least once a week during the summer.
3. Swat each fly that comes within reach.
4. Flies feed on garbage and filth. Use a covered garbage pail, either burn or bury the garbage.
5. Screen your kitchen, your dining room and your sleeping rooms against them. The same screens will keep out mosquitoes.
6. Flies carry filth from outhouses to food within doors. Have sanitary outhouses. Write to the State Department of health, 2411 North Charles Street, Baltimore, for a plan

As To Mosquitoes

1. Mosquitoes lay their eggs on the surface of stagnant water. A very small amount of water is all they need. Old tin cans and other rubbish answer their purpose as well as a whole stream. Get rid of the breeding places. Buy the tin cans and other rubbish if you can't get rid of them otherwise.
2. Oil your stagnant streams. Your health officer will tell you how and what to do.
3. Do it now.

Evidently Chinese Boy Has No Use for 'Phone

Telephone service in Shanghai, with the subscribers talking half a dozen languages and the operators all Chinese, has been the target of complaint.

The latest voice raised is that of a Chinese youth, the operator of a private switchboard in a foreign firm. He stated, in that peculiar phraseology known only to his kind, as follows:

"For long time now this telephone no good and everybody fight me. This not my fault. I proper boy, but telephone make everybody angry and everybody fight everybody else. Pretty soon all Shanghai fight and telephone fault. This no proper. My Sunday school say must love everybody. How can I love everybody when everybody fight me because telephone no work. I think house boy job more better. But every house have telephone and everybody fight me again. How I get away from telephone? I work in shop, have telephone; I go to school, have telephone; everybody have telephone, so fashion everybody fight. More proper I think have telephone all finish. May be you have friend who no have telephone and wanchee house boy, you tell me, I go. No more telephone, I very happy."

Popular Weather Signs Decried by Forecaster

"There's a lot of pagan superstition about many of the weather signs that people like to believe in," said a weather forecaster recently. "There are a score of rural sayings, especially when winter is coming on, as to how severe it will be. The groundhog is credited with miraculous vision. Such ideas go back for centuries.

"Lots of people believe that the position of the new moon is a sure foreteller of weather. The saying is that if the new moon stands upright, the thin crescent in a vertical position, the weather will be dry for the greater part of the coming month. On the other hand, if the new moon reclines on its back, in the shape of a shallow cup, that means a month of rainy weather.

"All the pioneers in this country firmly believed that, and out in the country districts you will find many people today who are equally credulous. Unfortunately, the idea has no basis in fact. Weather bureau records, if examined, will completely disprove any such ideas."—New York Sun.
