UMPIRE RULES FORFEIT

Church Hill, Md., May 24—Rock Hall relinquished its place at the top of the Chesapeake Bay League heap and stood tied with Church Hill after a ninth inning argument here when, with none out and the score 18 to 17 in favor of the home club, Joe Williams was called out by Umpire Hanson Horsey on an attempted steal from second to third.

It was a most interesting game of base ball and we are sorry that it ended in a dispute.

CECILTON WINS

Kennedyville, Md., May 24—Cecilton won a 7-to-4 victory over Kennedyville after the home club had eight men put out through poor base running. The visitors were outhit througout the tilt.

Cecilton opened with a two-bagger by Webb, scoring Carey, who had walked, and Jones, who had garnered a single.

Millington, Md., May 24—A two-base hit by Godwin scoring Stack and E. Lockwood, broke up a 10-inning game which was taken, 4 to 3, by Millington against Galena in the Chesapeake Bay League.

WHY

Farmers Like "Grasshopper Mouse."

Many farmers are now encouraging the "grasshopper mouse" to make his home in their fields. This husky little rodent takes its name not from any physical characteristics of its own, but rather from its diet. It first got its name in North Dakota when examinations showed that it fed largely on grasshoppers. In Arizona, on the other hand, it is called the "scorpion" mouse for a similar reason. This variety of mouse has been known to science not quite a century, the first specimen having been taken by Maximilian, prince of Wied, at the Mandan villages in North Dakota in 1833. Recently reported studies have demonstrated their importance. In the western United States and adjoining parts of Canada and Mexico they have been found to be holding numerous harmful insects in check and keeping the proper balance among the small animals that infest farms.

The grasshopper mouse is distinguished by its heavy build and short, thick tail. Its short legs and bulky body handicap it in running but it is harder to catch than swifter rodents on account of its quickness at turning and dodging, which enable it, also, to corner its prey easily. It is less nervous and timid than most rodents and gives evidence of unusual hunting instincts. Its quarry includes not only many kinds of insects, but also other rodents. Its chief sport is said to be capturing other mice of its own size or smaller, and it is credited, too, with destroying the young of many burrowing rodents much larger than itself.

It will also rid kitchens, basements, cellars or greenhouses of many insect pests.

Why Oil on Surface of Water Curbs Movement

Oil being a viscous, slow-moving liquid, remains on the surface of the water, and so curbs the movement of the waves. So sometimes in a storm oil is poured into the sea from different parts of a vessel according to the direction of the wind, the course of the ship, and so on. When the vessel is running before a gale the oil is distributed from the bows, whence it spreads aft, and gives protection to the vessel all round. If it were poured on the sea from the stern the oil would be left behind. Where one vessel is towing another the towing vessel distributes the oil from its own bows and on both sides. In this way the oil spreads so as to benefit both vessels. The oil is distributed sometimes by pipe, and sometimes by throwing overboard porous bags attached to a rope. The oil slowly filters through these bags.

Why Flowers Fade Quickly

There are two mistakes commonly made in cutting flowers for indoor use. One is to wait until they are fully opened, often until they have been open for several days, before cutting them. The other is to cut them during the heat of the day, when they are in ideal condition to wilt. Most flowers are best cut when in full bud or just as they are beginning to open. There are, of course, some exceptions to this, such as dahlias, which do not expand fully until after three to five days after the buds have unfolded. As a general rule, flowers will open more nearly perfect and will last longer if taken just as the buds are expanding and with fairly long stems.

Why Called Sport of Kings

Horse racing has been called the "Sport of Kings" because it has been one of their amusements since the earliest dawn of civilization. Thothmes of the eighteenth Egyptian dynasty left a papyrus letter telling of his conquest of Mesopotamia, and priding himself upon the acquisition of the racing horse (the Arab) and being the first to introduce him in Africa. Somewhat later the records tell of King Solomon's buying horses from Egypt and paying as much as $3,000 for some of them. Among the Greeks horse racing was introduced into the Olympic games in the thirty-third Olympiad (648 B. C.).

If certain States' rights advocates had their way the United States would become the Untied States.

SOMETHING FOR THE FARMER TO CONSIDER

It is estimated that at present there are some 30,000,000 pounds of quality dairy butter in storage. Prices are the lowest in 25 years. This may seem a tremendous surplus but, as the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association of New Pork points out, it could be entirely eliminated if each of the six million American farm families would use one extra pound of butter per week for a period of five weeks.

It is thought out, further, that the dairy farmer himself is not without blame. A survey of cross-roads and village grocery stores disclosed that a large part of butter substitutes sold in this country are purchased and consumed by farm families, in spite of the fact that these substitutes are lacking in the protective vitamin found in genuine quality dairy products.

It looks as if the solution to the dairy phase of the farm problem is largely a matter for the farmer himself to solve through his own dinner table.

The heavy figures with the large waistlines of old times were developed in the beefsteak - for - breakfast days. Today's keen, alert men eat their favorite cereal with Schauber's pure milk and cream.
