TRUTHS.

Love never gets its growth.
The thankful man is always rich.
A Christain is one who obeys Christ.
Goodness makes all people beautiful.
The sin that dies the hardest is pride.
The devil never fires into his own men.
The man who hurts himself hurts Christ.
A lie always carries a dagger in its hand.
A soft answer has saved many a hard fight.
When people get rich they forget how to give.
The things we do for God keep on growing forever.
Woman is the best ambassador for Christ on earth.
It is a long step toward Heaven to have a good mother.
A mother's love is the same kind of love as God's love.
Some people never look up as long as they can stand up.
In God's service, the man who does nothing gets nothing.
It dosen't make a small man any bigger to lift him up.
Culture cannot destroy sin. All it can do is to hide it.
Sins of neglect always have bloody swords in their hands.
The man who has no trials, has no fellowship with Christ.
When you start out to save sinners don't put on your gloves.
The devil has never been able to overload a real Christain.
The devil loves to sit down and look at people who worry.
Whenever a man chooses evil he shakes hands with the devil.
No man is good who behaves himself simply because he has to do so.
Love would never have to weep if it could always be understood.
The religion of a great many people consists of a set of notions.
The first condition of salvation is to be willing to be saved to-day.
The temptations that overcome us are to teach us our need of Christ.
The truth we hear amounts to nothing unless we resolve to love it.
The only moment that any sinner may call his own is the present one.
The devil hates the light that shines out from a Christian character.
Whenever a Universalist gets mad he believes there ought to be a hell.
The devil is not afraid of the man who has nothing but powder in his gun.
It is hard to discourage the Christian who has learned to love his enemies.
The only joys which live and grow are those which are shared with others.

Is Beauty a Blessing.

Of the beautiful women I have known but few have attained superiority of any kind. In marriage they have frequently made failures; why, I don't know, unless the possession of great loveliness is incompatible with the possession of an equal amount of judgment.

So much is expected by the woman accustomed to admiration that she plays and palters with her fate till the crooked stick is all that is left her. This we see exemplified again and again. While the earnest, lofty, sweet smiling woman of the pale hair and doubtful line of nose has, perhaps, one true lover whose worth she has time to recognize, an acknowledged beauty will herself surrounded by a crowd of showy egoists whose admiration so dazes and bewilders herself upon the most importunate one in order to end the unseemly struggle.

Then the incentive to education, and to the cultivation of one's especial powers is lacking. Forgetting that the triumphs which have made a holiday of youth must lessen with the years, many a fair one neglects that training of the mind which gives to her who is poor in all else, an endless storehouse of wealth from which she can hope to produce treasures for her own delectation and that of those about her, long after the fitful bloom upon her hadsome sister's cheek has faded with the roses of departed summer.

Though the world can show instances here and there of women in whose dazzling glances genius and beauty struggle for equal recognition, are they not the exception proving the rule? To win without effort, and yet to ignore these victories for the sake of the more lasting and honorable ones which follow the attainment of excellence in any one thing, means character, and character added to loveliness gives us those rare specimens of womanly perfection which assure us that poetry and art are not solely in the minds of men, but exist here and there in an embodied form for the encouragement and delight of struggling human nature.

A LOST LAKE.

A curious spectacle was to be seen on the outskirts of Gainesville, Fla., recently. Alachua lake, from ten to fifteen miles in length and covering some 40,000 acres of land is no more. On its banks were lying thousands of dead fish, dead alligators floated ghastly in pools of black water, and the atmosphere was heavy with noxious gases. Men and boys were there in throngs with hoes and rakes, dragging to shore hundreds of fish which had sought the pools for refuge. The waters were fairly alive with their struggles for existence. Except for a small stream known as Payne's creek, flowing from Newman's lake into the Sink, the two main basins of the Sink and a few stagnant pools, no writer is now to be seen where years ago steamers were ploughing their way. This is the second time since 1823 that a similar occurrence has taken place. At that time the bed of the lake was a large prarie—Payne's prairie having in it a body of water called the Sink and a small creek. In 1868 heavy rains filled up the prairie, but the water disappeared after a short time, and the prairie was again dry land.

In 1873, after a series of heavy rains, the Sink overflowed and the creek swelled to the dimensions of a lake. During several years the waters increased till a larger lake was formed, and for fully fifteen years sufficient depth of water stood over the prairie to allow of small steamers. During the last two years, however, the waters have been gradually lowering, and about four weeks ago they commenced going down with surprising rapidity, the lake falling about eight feet in ten days, until now nothing is left of Alachua Lake but the memory of it. The Sink is considered the cause of this change. There is evidently an underground passage connected, and for some reason not understood, this underground passage has been acting as a drain until all the water in the lake has been drawn off.—Providence Journal.

GRAMMAR AGAINST LOVE.

How George Failed to Win a Boston Girl.

"Darling," he said softly, and at the same time with a certain degree of firmness, "I enjoyed your letters greatly while I was away."

"Oh, did you, George?" cried the beautiful girl, her face glowing with pleasure.

"Yes, Ethel, I did," he said, "despite the fact that I could hardly approve of some of the phrases you used."

"Oh, I know I can't write well, George," she said, penitently, while she toyed with his silken mustache, "but you knew what I meant?"

"Yes, I knew what you meant," he said, patronizingly, "but it was, nevertheless, open to misconstruction, and one cannot be too careful. I am some what of a stickler in that line, you know. Now, in your last letter you began 'My Dearest Darling,'"

"Oh, George!" And the beautiful girl tried to hide her blushes in his shoulder.

"Tut, tut," he said. "Don't be foolish. That would indicate, you see, that you had several other darlings. Of course, it gives me the preference as being the dearest, but then it dosen't look right for a girl to have too many darlings. One ought to be sufficient, especially when he is engaged;"

"Why, George!" She had her head off his shoulder now.

"Oh, of course, I know what you mean," he went on, in his superior way, "but one might as well be correct. Now, in another letter you called me your 'ownie own.' That doesn't make sense. 'Ownie own' conveys no more meaning than 'own.'"

"George!" There was a menace in her tone, but he was too busy with his little lesson to notice it.

"Another time——" he began.

"Never mind the other time," she interrupted.

"Why, my dear, I was only giving you a little instruction in the use of English."

"Oh, yes, my use of language doesn't suit." The beautiful girl was a trifle excited.

"My dearest—"

"But I'll improve—I'll do better. I suppose if I called a man Mr. Jones it would indicate that there were other Joneses who were not to be called 'Mister'?

"Um—well—"

"Um, well, yes. And if I ever meet another man named Jones, George Marion Jones, I'll take pains to call him Mr. Jones. Good night."

As George Marion Jones walked slowly home he resolved never again to find fault with the wording of a love letter. The next feminine heart he captures can roam at will in or out of the dictionary and the grammar.

Solomon the Second.

A country Judge in Hungary gave a decision a few weeks ago of which Solomon himself might be proud. Members of the Nazarinesect in the town of Gyoma requested his honor to be allowed to crucify one of their number "who was a Messiah, and had been called by Heaven to save men." The judge for a moment was dumbfounded.

"Friends," he replied, after recovering his senses, "I do not wish to interfere with your religious practices. If your Messiah wishes to be crucified, let him prepare himself for death. Remember, however, if he does not rise in three days, I shall cause every one of you to be hanged."

The Nazarines, it is needless to add, allowed their chief to live.

A Girl's Essay on Boys.

"Boys are men that have not got as big as their papas, and girls are women that will be young ladies by and by.

"Man was made before woman. When God looked at Adam he said to himself: 'Well, I think I can do better if I try again,' and then he made Eve. God liked Eve so much better than Adam, that there have been more women than men. Boys are a trouble. They wear out everything—but soap. If I had my way, half the boys in the world would be girls, and the rest would be dolls. My papa is so nice, that I think he must have been a little girl when he was a little boy."

Cheerfulness.

Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness, altogether past calculation its powers of endurance. Efforts to be permanently useful must be uniformly joyous—a spirit all sunshine, graceful from very gladness, beautiful because bright.

To Users of "Fish-Brand" Goods.

The cloth used in our Fish Brand Jackets and Pants has always been of unexcelled strength and durability, but we have just discovered that the mill which has made the cloth for the past ten years has, thro' a mistake, delivered us a small quantity of cloth which is far below our standard. This defect was not known to us until some of the goods had been placed upon the market, and as we intend that the Fish Brand goods shall be the standard for strength, durability and waterproof qualities, we hereby inform all users of these goods that we have authorized every store-keeper handling Fish Brand Oiled Clothing to give at once a new and perfect garment for any that have been torn and are not of the usual strength.
