To cure constipation purging the bowels should be avoided; it weakens their power of motion. A gentle aperient effect is only required. Tutt's Tiny Liver Pills are prepared with special views to the permanent cure of

They are mild and remain in the system until they act on the liver, cause a natural flow of bile and their tonic properties impart power to the bowels to remove unhealthy accumulations. Good appetite and digestion result from the use of these little pills. Price, 25c. Office, 39 Park Place, N. Y.

Thanksgiving Joys.

Thanksgiving day is almost gone,
And peace reigns overhead;
And mother's joy—her own sweet boy—
Is trundled off to bed.

Yet what are those unearthly sounds
That pierce the midnight air?
And what's that throbbing noise we hear
Come rumbling down the stair?

It is our little household pet,
Who tosses upon high,
And wages an unequal fight
With turkey and mince pie. —Life.

Blessings on the Day.

Oh, blessings on the holiday!
The subject of my rhyme;
Oft in life's stormy sea it stands
A beacon for all time.
And many a homestead in our land
Uprising fair and gay,
Dates all its hopes and all its joys
From dear Thanksgiving day!
—R. W. Hume in New York Telegram.

GAMES FOR THANKSGIVING.

Amusement for the Young Folks Should Close the Festal Day.

The short November day all too soon has departed and night has "spread her dark mantle o'er the scene." The older folks are quiet and thoughtful, conversing in low tones or indulging in tender memories of past Thanksgivings called up by the day's festivities. But as the lamps are lighted the young people are full of mirth and gayety and eager for an evening's amusement. You all have tried pinning on the donkey's tail. A game very like it and appropriate for the day is called the "Headless Turkey."

A figure of a large turkey, minus a head, is drawn in charcoal or cut from dark colored cambric and fastened on a sheet, which is tightly stretched against a wall. To each member of the company is given a pin and a turkey's head cut out of cambric, which, if rightly placed, will fit the turkey's neck. Then, one at a time, the players are blindfolded and placed at the end of the room opposite the sheet. After turning them around three times one way and then three times the other they are started off that they may search for the turkey and pin the head where they suppose it belongs. He must pin it to the spot where he first touches. To the person who comes nearest placing the head in its proper position a prize is given, and to the one who makes the least successful effort is presented a turkey feather, which he must wear the rest of the evening.

Impromptu tableaux are also suggested as pleasant Thanksgiving diversions, and to these you may call in the older members of the family if you like, though I know families where the parents and grown up sisters engage in the children's plays very often and add greatly to their pleasure. When two rooms are connected by folding doors a whole room may be used as a stage, and no curtains are needed, as the doors answer very well in their place. When there are no double doors one end of a room may be curtained off with sheets or any kind of drapery hung from a rope stretched from the sides of opposite doors or windows. Pumpkin lanterns set in a row along the floor make a funny substitute for footlights, and will decorate the stage appropriately, besides being perfectly safe. I wonder if you know how to make a pumpkin lantern. Cut a hole in one side large enough to pass a candle on a small candlestick through. Remove the seed, etc., from the inside; scrape the other side very thin, so the light will shine through; light your candle, put it in, and you have a pumpkin lantern. The open side must of course be next the stage, else the light will shine out from instead of onto the stage.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Give Thanks.

What a world it is in which, when the great festival of Thanksgiving comes on its yearly round, there is always something to be found to be thankful for, even, it would seem, in the case of the most wretched!

Are we poor? We might be beggars. Are we beggars? We might be lepers. Are we lepers? Our sickness might be unto death. Is it unto death? We have yet a heaven beyond. For all let us give thanks. Thanks surely if we are in health of body and mind; and even in illness there is much reason and occasion to be found for a grateful heart. Has trouble come to us now? It might be worse. Are we alone? There is poorer company than ourselves to be had. Have we lost our dearest and best? They, at any rate, are not here to suffer. Has the year dealt crushing blows in business? It has not taken away also our power and will to work. Have we work? Then for that and all the rest give thanks again. Give thanks that we live and breathe and have our being in this world of wonder and light and beauty. For, poor and sick and sad though we may be, though

Other hands may grasp the field and forest,
Proud proprietors in pomp may shine,
But with fervent love if thou adorest,
Thou art wealthier—all the world is thine!
—Harper's Bazar.

The Mercies of the Lord.

The recurring season never fails to find the same repeated mercies. We thank God this year for the same blessings as claimed our praise on last Thanksgiving day. Again and again it is recounted in that book of the Bible which is all psalms of praise how unfailing and repeated is the goodness of God. "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting." "Thy mercy, O Lord, endureth forever."

Let this, then, be a day of gladness for all our people, whatever their condition, race or religion. Let rich and poor together praise God today. Let Protestants and Catholics lift up the voice of simultaneous thanksgiving. Let this be a national holiday of praise to God, and a day when each shall add to the other's joy by gifts and aid and fellowship of praise.—New York Independent.

Doing Some Shooting.

"It once cost me fifty dollars to shoot at myself," said Frank E. Blair to the Story Tellers' club that was holding an informal session on the sidewalk at the Southern. "I got into a Baltimore hotel very late one night and very tired. A thunderstorm was raging at the time, and I am as afraid of lightning as a sweet girl graduate of a mouse, so I turned off the light, intending to disrobe in the darkness. I had taken my pistol out of my pocket to place it under my pillow, when there was a blinding flash of lightning. I caught sight of a villainous looking fellow not ten feet distant with a pistol in his hand. He was standing in a crouching, expectant attitude, and I felt sure that his intention was to murder and rob me. 'Who's there?' I called, but got no reply. I grasped my pistol firmly and advanced a step or two. There was another flash of lightning, and there was the villain, almost within arm's length, gun in hand. I pulled the trigger twice. There were two stunning reports and a crashing of glass. Then I realized that I had done it—made an ass of myself. I sat down on the edge of the bed, ashamed to turn on the light. It was a full length mirror. I had shot my own shadow to smithereens—had mistaken myself for a cutthroat."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Don't Forget the Cook.

And who thought about the cook? The cook it was who prepared the feast which tickled the cockles of your heart and made you look at all things through the roseate spectacles which are but an adjunct to a well fed stomach. Thanksgiving is a great day for the cook. She can glory over the triumph of her art. She can offer up thanks that the soup was just right, that the turkey was well cooked, that the pudding was grand, and that she, in her humble way, did much to make Thanksgiving a day for giving thanks.

Remember the Day.

The feast at last. The grace is said,
And up bobs every eager head,
And bright eyes, like some greedy power,
Go seeking what they may devour.

The turkey at the feast is lost;
The chickens get their drumsticks crossed,
And empty plates, just filled with pies,
The good wife marks with smiling eyes.

Perhaps this day in years to come
May find them wanderers far from home,
And with joy hunting memories cheer
The shadows of that changeful year.
—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Little Paul's Thanksgiving.

They tossed him and they squeezed him,
And they kissed him, one and all;
They said, "You blessed, blessed boy!"
And "Darling little Paul!"

But they didn't give him turkey,
Nor any pumpkin pie,
And when the nuts and grapes went round
They slyly passed him by.

But he didn't seem to mind it,
For in the sweetest way
He sat and sucked his little thumb,
His first Thanksgiving day.
—Emma C. Dowd in Youth's Companion.

The Tragedy of the Barnyard.

By the right of ancient custom and the order of the president this is lamentation day—in the barnyard. Elsewhere, perhaps, it is Thanksgiving day, and the selfish world of folks, that spares from the prodigal's joy no pitying thought for the fatted calf, is going to make it a holiday. Blessed little concern is given the tremendous tragedy it brings to poultry. There is rather a glory in the slaughter, and the carnival is peculiarly one of death. "The frost is in the pumpkin and the fodder is thriftily in shock" throughout this northern farm land this morning. There is a rime upon the shingles of the barn and a white mist rises from the litter of the stable yard.

Who would mar this peaceful scene and check this flow of life and joy? The duty has its vandal candidate, and he does so in the name of Thanksgiving. Down from the wall comes the old smoothbore; down its rusty throat go the powder and the shot; down against the stock goes the farmer's cheek as he levels his eye along the barrel; down comes the hammer, and—oh, the crime of it!—down comes the gobbler in the pride of his plethoric prime. There is one wild cry and then a prodigious flutter. This is the drama of the day, and whether it be the block instead of the gunshot it is none the less tragic.—Chicago News-Record.

Thanksgiving a Patriotic Festival.

As a patriotic festival Thanksgiving does much to foster love of country and a feeling of pride in the goodly land which is our national heritage. From sea to sea, through all our borders, we are a Christian people, and we expect to receive the crowding immigrants from foreign shores and make them Christian too.

In the home happy scenes are the rule. Grandparents survey with proud complacency the features of the babies. Only a grandparent fully appreciates the rare endowments and wonderful beauty of the second generation. Children on their part find it difficult to believe that the grandparents who spoil them could ever have said "No" with the readiness and ease with which that monosyllable is uttered by father and mother. Around the table and by the hearth reminiscences are in order, and the quickly responsive laughter crowns the innocent jest.—Christian at Work.

Made a Bronze Medal.

Joseph Moore, of Birmingham, a die sinker, made his reputation by a medal in bronze four inches in diameter, of which few copies were struck. On one side he showed in pretty high relief the "Salvator Mundi" of Leonardo da Vinci and on the other the "Christus Consolator" of Ary Scheffer. The latter wrote in thanks for a copy of the work, "Your medal has immortalized my picture; it will outlive the canvas."—New York Times.

Not Unlikely.

Mr. Jimson—What? Is Bilson going to get married? He told me positively he would never marry again.

Mrs. Jimson (calmly)—I presume you asked him on the way to the funeral.—New York Weekly.

"Eldah, you'll have ter skuse de tu'key. Hit's a leetle ovahdone. My wife dressed it an hung it in de smokehouse las' night, an dis mawnin, 'bout fo' o'clock, hit burned down."—Harper's Bazar.
