Erysipelas in the Face

Nearly Blind, But Perfectly Cured

Health, Appetite and Strength Renewed by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
"Hood's Sarsaparilla is splendid. I had long been troubled with erysipelas, and three times had it in my head and face. I became nearly blind and my hair all came out. My husband wished me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I only took three bottles before from my old-time trouble and long sufferings. It has never returned until last winter while I was ill with the grip, a slight attack broke out on my face. After my sickness I was not well; became easily tired and lost my appetite. I resumed taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and am now using the fourth bottle and can run up and down stairs as spry as ever. The tired feeling is gone and I have a good appetite." MRS. WM. E. BARINGER, Olive Ridge, New York.

CHINESE MOCK MONEY.

Made by the Celestials to Defraud Their Departed Ancestors.

A correspondent of The North China Herald, writing from the interior of Kiangsu province, mentions that one of the industries there is the manufacture of mock money for offering to the dead. Formerly the Chinese burned sham paper money, but in these days of enlightenment and foreign intercourse the natives of Soongkong, Hangchow and other places have come to the conclusion that dollars are more handy to the ghosts than clumsy paper money; hence they now, to a great extent, supply their ancestors and departed friends with mock dollars. These are only half the size of real dollars, but there appears to be no more harm in cheating the dead than there is in cheating the living. Besides the deceased are not supposed to know the difference, for many of them parted this life before silver dollars were imported into China. A hundred mock carolus dollars, done up in boxes, are sold for 34 cash.

The operation of making this money is interesting. First of all there are blocks of tin which are melted down and then poured between boards lined with Chinese paper, and when the upper board is pressed down on the lower a thickness of tin remains. This is next cut up into strips 4 inches long, one wide and an eighth of an inch thick. Some 10 of these strips are placed evenly together, one on top of the other, and one end is held between the fingers, when the workman proceeds to hammer them out till he has beaten them so fine that they are now 3 feet long and a foot broad and so thin that they are not thicker than the thinnest paper. This is next pasted on common cardboard, which is then cut with a punching machine to the size of half dollars, and this having been done a boy takes the cut out pieces in hand and with two dies, one representing the one side and the other the reverse, hammers impressions of dollars on them, and the money is ready for use.

Another very curious instance of the practice of cheating the gods is recorded in the same journal, but from quite a different part of the country. It appears that districts of the Anhui province have lately been ravaged by an epidemic, so that in many places the people were unable to attend to the harvesting of the crops. An attempt was then made to deceive the gods by "playing at" New Year's day and pretending that Sept. 1 was the first day of the new year. Every preparation for celebrating the bogus new year was made, such as burning firecrackers and pasting happy sentences in red paper on the doors. The object was to make the god of sickness think that he had made a mistake in the seasons and had erred in bringing an epidemic on the people at a time when no epidemics in the course of nature should appear. As any action contrary to nature done by the gods is liable to punishment by the king of heaven, the actors in this farce thought that the god of sickness would gather his evil spirits back to him for fear of the displeasure of his superior divinity. This child's play received the permission and co-operation of the local authorities.—London Times.

How the Solomon Islanders Obtain Fire.

They select a stake of dry, soft wood about as thick as a man's wrist. From this they slice off a few chips in one place, so as to make a flat surface for rubbing. The stake is then placed on the ground in front of the operator, who sits at one end of it and holds it firmly between his toes. He then takes a piece of hard wood, shaped like a pencil, and holding it with both hands begins rubbing up and down the flat surface of the stake. A groove is soon formed in the stake and a dark colored dust, which is pushed to the end of the groove. By and by this dust begins to smolder. Next a piece of dried touchwood is applied and blown up until it glows. In this way, and with perfectly dried wood, a native will produce fire in something less than a minute. But the art is not easily learned, and a European who lived on the island for some time says that although he had tried until his shoulder ached, he was never able to produce more than smoke.—New York World.

Had Fun With the Policeman.

It is seldom that one of the finest gets such a scare as a member of the force received the other night on Park row in front of the postoffice. This policeman has made himself obnoxious to the newsboys who congregate around the postoffice. He seemed to them to take delight in moving them on. The boys had no redress, but at last they took up a scheme which has afforded pleasure to small boys more than once.

They secured an old pair of trousers, together with a coat and a hat, which they stuffed with straw. Waiting until the policeman was looking in their direction, two of them, with the dummy between them, boldly walked out of Beekman street and started across Park row toward the postoffice. The sight of the two boys in charge of a man who apparently could not take care of himself interested the policeman, and he started to follow them. The boys walked on until they reached the middle of the street, when they threw the figure on the track before an approaching horse car and fled.

With a pale face and an involuntary cry of terror the policeman ran toward the body. He had gone but a few feet when he tripped and fell. The driver of the car put on the brake just as the horses reached the body. Just then two boys rushed from the postoffice, seized the body by the legs, one on each side, and ran down Beekman street with it amid the shouts of their companions, who had been silent but much amused witnesses of the joke. IMPORTANT NAVAL TESTS AT HAND.

To Dive Under Waves—May Revolutionize the Navies of the World.

A dispatch from Washington to the Baltimore Sun says:

Sharp competition is likely to arise among the shipbuilders for the construction of a sub-marine boat which the Navy Department has decided to build. The novelty of the proposed boat and the fame which will fall to the builder excite the interest of shipbuilders, and will lead to close bidding. Under the decision of the department Mr. Holland, the designer of the craft, is privileged to have it built where he elects. The Cramps, a Baltimore firm and the Newport News Company are understood to be bidders. The difficulty experienced in sub-marine construction has always been that of getting one able to run a long distance wholly under water and find the object aimed at, while also furnishing air enough for its crew. But when for this difficult task is substituted that of submerging the main part of the hull, leaving above water a tolerably spacious armed conning tower, with an air shaft and smokestack, it is obvious that there is no mechanical difficulty in the way. If to this is added the possibility of complete submersion, and of proceeding under the water for a short time, rising to take the necessary bearings, the craft may be ranked distinctively as a sub-aquatic boat. In the case of the proposed Holland boat these are the results aimed at.

Several years ago the invention of Mr. Baker, of Chicago, was brought to the attention of the Navy Department, and Commander Folger was directed to personally examine it. He found that the craft indicated a fair promise of success in the future, although his request that an attempt be made to steer a course of one mile, submerged, at six knots could not be satisfied. Afterward a board examined the boat and reported that it "satisfactorily demonstrated the practicability of its development as a weapon of warfare."

When Congress early last year voted $200,000 for a sub-marine boat and experiments both Mr. Holland and Mr. Baker submitted plans. Others competed, but their plans did not fulfill conditions. The Holland type was reported the most practical and this report was indorsed by the Secretary, who decided, however, before accepting any proposals to have investigations made of the effect produced upon the crew of a submerged boat by the explosion of its torpedo nearby. These investigations were made at Newport, it being shown that no danger need be apprehended on that score.

The promising features of the Holland boat are that it will be able to run very fast near the surface, with only its armored barbetee showing; that this is sufficiently protected to justify ignoring the projectiles of rapid-fire and machine guns, which have heretofore been the main terror of torpedo boats; finally that it can be wholly submerged with great rapidity, so that it might frequently rise and take bearings on its approaching an enemy, as it would be only a few seconds under fire. Quadruple expansion engines will furnish the steam power employed for propulsion on the surface, or with the barbette exposed, and the stored-up steam will act for a few moments after diving, while the propelling power under water will be furnished by storage batteries and dynamo. The barbette, which will be always above the water, except when total submersion becomes necessary, has plenty of room for the observation space of the pilot, for the pilot, for the smokestack of the engine, for the ventilating pipe which gives fresh air to those below and for a companion way. It would be designed, however, to sink this barbette until only four feet remained above water. The hull of the boat will be protected by three feet of water from the fire of the enemy, while the exposed barbette, being covered with no less than eight inches of nickle steel, would also be well protected, apart from the small target it afforded. It is claimed that the vessel can dive from its position with the barbette above the surface, in from five to ten seconds, and sinking rapidly a depth of twenty feet it would be beyond the reach of attack.

Naval Warships.

The sub-committee of the House naval committee is making progress with the preparation of the appropriation bid, and will have it ready to report to the House early in January. Mr. Talbott, who is chairman of the second committee, has been in the city this week hard at work on the bill, and expects to reach that part of the Secretary's recommendations relating to more battle-ships and torpedo-boats soon after the holidays.

While Chairman Sayres, of the appropriations committee, has already protested against further appropriations by this Congress for an increase of the navy, but nevertheless many members of the naval committee feel sanguine that they can defeat any such move end carry out at least a part of the Secretary's program, which is supported by the President in his annual message.

Both of these recommendations are liberal and contemplate a greater outlay of money than has been granted the navy since Mr. Whitney's administration. If one half of this can be carried out the department will be more than satisfied. One battle-ship each year, with several torpedo-boats, it is pointed out, would in a brief time give the navy a formidable fleet, and if this policy of Mr. Herbert's can be realized that part of the navy which has been generally regarded as weak will be on equal footing with the strength of the cruiser class.

Corbett's Views of Foot Ball.

Champion Pugilist Corbett thinks foot-ball is brutal. He says there is nothing save a sparring match which compares with foot-ball as it is played in these days. He continued: "Boxing, where professionals are concerned in it, is frowned upon by a majority of people who patronize foot-ball games. As a matter of fact there is nothing brutal about boxing. No thoroughly trained athlete has ever been seriously injured in a glove contest. As a rule men who are knocked out are as good as ever in five minutes after the affair is over.

"Any physician can tell in an instant whether a man is in shape for a glove fight, and an examination should be made of the men who are about to enter the ring.

"I don't exactly know what should be done with the players before a foot-ball game, but it usually takes a dozen surgeons to help the boys out during its progress. If I had sons, and they were in doubt as to whether they should become foot-ball players or professional bexers, I should advise them to take to the roped arena.

"A good boxer can take care of himself in almost any kind of company. I am forced to admit at the same time that a foot-ball player would be at home in a barroom scrimmage. The boxer, however, would have the better of it, I should think.

"I do not wish to discourage any sports, but it seems to me that if its brutal feature were eliminated foot-ball would be a better game.

"Men and women who would hold up their hands in horror at the sight of a boxing glove pay fabulous prices to watch these brutal exhibitions and shout themselves hoarse before they get through."

The Visible and Invisible.

The wisest Indian philosophy has never boggled, like ours, over that silly word "supernatural." The Upanishad says, "What is in the visible exists also in the invisible, and what is in Brahm's world is also here." The ultimate, albeit unreachable, is as real to the Asiatic mind as rice, and in the Bhagavad-Gita Arjuna is actually permitted to behold the embodied infinite. Indeed it is rather this present existence which India regards as the illusion, the maya. To see the stars we must wait for night, and to live we must die. Nor is it uninteresting to note in Hindoo classics how these large and happy serenities of oriental view have softened personifications of death.—Sir Edwin Arnold.

Vanderbilt's Religion.

Commodore Vanderbilt was a friend of the late Dr. Deems, and one was about as clerical looking as the other. The two were riding in a Fourth avenue car one day, when two drunken men got in. One of the newcomers swore, and his companion reproved him for such conduct in the presence of a parson. The offender thereupon, turning not to Dr. Deems, but to the old commodore, said, "You think I'm going to hell, don't you?" "No," said the commodore; "I hope not," and drunkard No. 2 said with conviction in reply to a glance of triumph from his friend, "He must be a Universalist."
