AN EARLY AIRSHIP

It Wouldn't Fly, Although It Got a Trial by Moonlight.

BUT IT CAUSED A SURPRISE.

Story of a Comedy That Was Enacted In the Dead Watches of the Night on the Banks of the Potomac In the Troublous Wartime Days of 1863.

In the Smithsonian institution at Washington there hangs an ancient model of an aeroplane. It looks to the casual observer like a small facsimile of the Wright biplane.

But it is many years older than the Wright flying machine. It is the Stringfellow airship, built in the early sixties of the last century, and it once caused the arrest as a spy and conspirator of Professor Joseph Henry, the eminent man of science who was the first secretary of the Smithsonian institution.

In the summer of 1863 Washington was in a state of the utmost agitation and uneasiness. The Confederate armies moving northward were threatening Washington itself, and southern scouts had raided within sight of the dome of the capitol.

A strong picket line was kept on duty night and day, especially along the banks of the Potomac. In that part of Washington there is a wide space of park known as the mall. There pickets constantly patrolled, keeping an eye upon the distant Virginia shore.

One moonlit midnight a picket pacing to and fro between the river and and the Smithsonian institution, which stood in a lonely part of the mall, saw a solitary man emerge from the shadow of the elms that bordered the grounds. He bore a strange, birdlike, nondescript thing that looked like nothing the sentinel had ever seen before.

Standing out in the open spaces, the solitary man flung his strange appliance into the air; it fluttered for a few feet and then sank to the ground. Again the man tossed it into the air and watched it flutter a short distance, while in the shadow of the elms the picket looked on in bewilderment.

It was no time to give any one the benefit of a doubt. The picket summoned the captain of the guard, and a squad of soldiers suddenly descended on the mysterious man.

"What is your name? What is this thing, and what are you doing with it?" queried the captain of his prisoner.

"I am Professor Henry, secretary of the Smithsonian institution yonder," said the prisoner. Then he stopped.

In that day for a man to admit that he was seriously experimenting with a flying machine was conclusive evidence of his insanity, and Professor Henry, who had chosen the dead watches of the night in which to experiment with Stringfellow's flying machine, hesitated to tell his captors what he was really doing.

"You're a spy," declared the captain, "and this thing is some kind of machine with which you're signaling to the Confederates."

"I am not a spy," declared Professor Henry. "I am experimenting with a flying machine. That is the truth."

This explanation was greeted with a roar of derisive laughter. The idea that a man of Professor Henry's reputation would fool with a flying machine was ridiculous. Certain now that they had caught a spy, they hustled the professor off to the guardhouse.

Unfortunately for him, his studious habits made him almost unknown in Washington; not a single man at the guardhouse knew him by sight. And so through the long night he was compelled to remain in durance.

At daybreak the captain reported his capture to the colonel in command. That officer, hurrying to the guardhouse, was astonished to find that the spy was his intimate friend, Professor Henry. But his astonishment was nothing compared to the chagrin of the captain and his squad.

Professor Henry, however, not only readily forgave them, but praised their diligence and zeal and admitted that he had given the picket very reasonable ground for suspicion.—Youth's Companion.

Compulsory Military Service.

Napoleon had "conscript" armies under the famous conscription law of General Jourdan in 1798, but the first nation to put the universal military service and army reserve systematically in action was Prussia, at the time of the outbreak of the war of liberation in 1813. The system has been developed since, and in the years since 1870 every European nation except Great Britain has adopted the compulsory service system.—New York Times.

Buttons.

It is only in comparatively modern times that buttons have been utilized as fasteners. The Greeks and Romans knew nothing of them, and, though they presented themselves as ornaments in the fourteenth century, buttonholes were still an undreamed of possibility.

Grateful Suburbanites.

Towne—Do you make your cook pay for what she breaks? Suburbs (in amazement)—Make her pay? I should say not. Why, every month, besides paying her salary, we reward her liberally for what she didn't break.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Those who will not be ruled by the rudder must be ruled by the rock.—Cornish proverb.

THE MEXICAN JAGUAR.

Stopping a Charge of the New World's Most Dangerous Animal.

There is a story of a fierce charge by an infuriated Mexican jaguar in an article that Mr. Harry H. Dunn writes in the Outing Magazine. A wooded hill, surrounded on two sides by water and on the other two by grass cropped short by the village goats, was set on fire to drive out the beast, which had taken refuge there.

Animals began to come from the tangle. Parrots, disturbed from their midday rest, flew in green and red and yellow clouds. Monkeys fled through the tops of the trees. Rabbits and rats and mice scurried underfoot, and we saw one ocelot, a little spotted jungle cat.

Then came the jaguar. Crossing the sloping side of the hill, the tiger appeared to Felipe, and the fellow, proud of the 73 repeater I had brought with me from Mexico City for him, fired as the spotted apparition crossed an open space in the tangle. Ordinarily Felipe is a good shot, but the rifle was new to him, and he managed only to put the slug in the cat's fore shoulder. The tiger screamed and leaped straight up into the air. When he came down all thought of flight had left him, and he headed for Felipe and myself. The Indian began to pump bullets at the tiger, and I remember noticing that the cat was not leaping or running, but trotting rapidly, as a house cat trots unfrightened about its own home.

We were confronting the most dangerous and most powerful animal in the new world, with the single exception of the Kadiak bear, and I doubt very much if any bear in the world could whip a maddened Mexican tiger. The jaguar's mouth was open, and his tail streamed straight out behind; he did not lash it from side to side, as I should have expected him to do.

At ten yards Felipe had emptied his magazine, dropped his rifle and whipped out his machete, when I found the tiger's forehead over the sights of the rifle. As the gun cracked the jaguar halted, staggered forward a short step or two, sank to his fore shoulders and turned over, dead.

POWER OF SILENCE.

Shown In the Art of the Painter and the Orator.

In painting the sacrifice of Iphigenia the artist, it has been said, exhausted the emotions of grief and horror in the faces of the bystanders.

"He has left nothing unsaid. How can he depict her father's sorrow?" was the anxious query of those friends who were watching the development of the picture. The artist threw a mantle over Agamemnon's face. The blank silence was more effective than any pictured woe.

One of the most extraordinary effects produced by absolute silence is recorded in the reports of a convention in which the foremost men of Virginia took part. John Randolph had a measure to carry in which he looked for the opposition of Alexander Campbell, a man then noted for his scholarship and power in debate.

Randolph had never seen the Scotch logician, but he had heard enough of him to make him and his partisans uneasy. When, therefore, the gaunt stranger first rose to speak in the convention Randolph looked at him with such an air of alarm as to attract the attention of the whole convention, and as he glanced around seemed to be asking for sympathy in his coming defeat. He then composed himself to listen with close attention.

Campbell, aware of this byplay, hesitated and lost the thread of his argument. Randolph's face by turns as he listened, expressed weariness, indifference and finally contempt. He leaned back and yawned. Campbell sat down hastily. He had lost the whole force of his speech. Not a word had been spoken, but he was defeated.—Washington Star.

Butterfly Pastry.

The favorite delicacy of the native Australian are bugong cakes, which are made from a species of butterfly. Fires are lighted under the trees upon which the butterflies settle, and, suffocated by the smoke, they drop to earth. The bodies are pounded into pulp and made into cakes, which have a very pungent odor, and they have the undesirable effect of making the eater very ill for several days. But if the diet is persevered with the unpleasant symptoms pass away, and the invalids digest them well and become exceedingly fat.

Reformed.

"How is Dick getting along with the woman that married him to reform him?"

"She has reformed him all right."

"Sure enough?"

"You bet. Before he was married he used to be as good as a meal ticket for me, but when I met him yesterday and tried to borrow a five he made me pay back a tenner I owed him."—Houston Post.

Soft Bullets.

Bullets of paper or tallow produce far greater damage than metal ones when used for short distance firing. A paper bullet passing through six pieces of tin placed one foot apart buckled them up and made them useless, whereas a metal bullet merely left a small round hole.

An Event.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself for not washing your face. Look at your little brother and see how nice his is," said the teacher.

The small girl sniveled. "Well," she replied, "it's his birfday."—London Standard.
