THEY DON'T WASTE WORDS.

Nyasaland Natives Exist In a State of Partial Coma.

Referring to the native peculiarities in Nyasaland, the author of "Hunting the Elephant In Africa," Captain C. H. Stigand, comments on a certain state of coma into which the "boys" descend when there is no active work for them to do, or at least when there is no compulsion to do it. He believes that the native is capable of assuming a state in which the mind is absolutely detached and not working, and when in such a state he is only recalled by a start to his present surroundings.

The life of the head man of a village in Nyasaland, when not engaged in the strenuous pursuit of his official duties, is something like this: At sunrise he crawls out of his hut and sits outside. After a short time his wife crawls out and offers him some food. He eats this and then makes his way to a tree, perhaps a hundred yards from the village. Under this he sits in deep abstraction, till about noon a child brings him some food and water. After partaking of this he moves a little so as to get the afternoon shade. He then sits in deep meditation until sunset, when he crawls into his hut and goes to sleep.

Sometimes he is joined by a few other old men under his tree. They hardly ever speak to each other, and if they say anything it is to make some obvious remark, as, "There is a dog." "Yes, it is a dog," "Oh," "Ah," and a further period of silence.

MADE HIMSELF AT HOME.

When He Got Through His Standing Was Unquestioned.

Robert Thorpe, an old Missouri stage driver, used to tell a story of how Anderson, the jayhawker, got one of his recruits. The Anderson boys held up Thorpe's stage near Glasgow one day. Among the passengers was a rawboned young Missourian who looked about as tough as the jayhawkers themselves.

"Give me yer val'bles," Anderson demanded of the youth, as he went down the line.

"Ain't got none," answered the young squirrel hunter.

"Where ye goin'?"

"To join Anderson's jayhawkers."

The leader sized him up a bit.

"Kin ye swim the Missoury river?" he asked him.

"Reckon so," the young man answered.

"Could ye kill a man?"

"Reckon so."

Anderson stepped forward and spat in the youngster's face. The youth bounded at the jayhawker like a cat, caught him full in the face with a right swing and went down on top of him, kicking and clawing.

The jayhawkers pulled the young demon off their leader, and he got up.

"You belong," he said. "Boys, give him a hawse."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Recognition Comes Slowly.

"The late Alfred Russel Wallace, the codiscoverer with Darwin of evolution, had a hard row to hoe at first," said a physiologist.

"Poor Dr. Wallace had in fact such a vary hard row to hoe that he couldn't afford to marry till he was sixty-three, when to balance matters he married a young girl of eighteen by whom he had a son and a daughter.

"I commiserated in London last summer with Dr. Wallace.

"'It was too bad,' I once said to him. 'A man of genius like you, cramped with poverty till past middle life! It was too bad.'

"'My friend,' Dr. Wallace replied, 'always you will find the fire of genius takes a long, long time to make the pot boil.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Bad For the Laurels.

William Dean Howells, according to the Washington Star, was admonishing a young novelist, who, after writing a fine novel, had produced only slight commercial things.

"Two critics," he said to the young man, "were discussing a certain author.

"'His laurels,' said the first critic, 'already seem faded and bedraggled.'

"'That,' the other critic agreed, 'is because he has been resting on them.'"

In the Customary Place.

A well known English bishop some time since lost his third wife. A clergyman who had known the first wife returned from Africa and wanted to see the grave. He called at the cathedral and saw the verger.

"Can you tell me where the bishop's wife is buried?"

"Well, sir," replied the verger, "I don't know for certain, but he mostly buries 'em at Brompton."—London Mail.

No Wedding Bells.

The mutual friend was speaking:

"If you love the girl and the parents on both sides are willing and you have $1,000,000 each I see no reason why you should not be married."

"Just one thing prevents it."

"Yes?"

"Yes. She won't have me."—Spur.

Her Chin.

Dawson—The facial features plainly indicate character and disposition. In selecting your wife, were you governed by her chin? Spenlow—No, but I have been ever since we married.

In the Sideshow.

Visitor—These dwarfs of yours are pretty big! Showman—Pardon me, sir; these are giant dwarfs.—Meggendorfer Blatter.

Don't Wait for the Fatal Stages of Kidney Illness. Profit By Chestertown People's Experience.

Occasional attacks of backache, irregular urination, headaches and dizzy spells are frequent symptoms of kidney disorders. It's an error to neglect these ills. The attacks may pass off for a time but generally return with greater intensity. Don't delay a minute. Begin taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and keep up their use until the desired results are obtained. Good work in Chestertown proves the effectiveness of this great kidney remedy.

Mrs. Albert Rawleigh, Cannon St., Chestertown, Md., says: "One of my family suffered from kidney trouble. There was sediment in the kidney secretions and the passages were too frequent. He had pains through his back and kidn ys and at times was dizzy. Doan's Kidney Pills were finally procured from Toulson's Drug Store and they made him well.
