DEMAND FOR CEDAR

Tennessee Farmers Get Good Money for Old Fences.

In Many Cases Agents Are Exchanging the Long-Used Rails for Modern Woven Wire—Wood Needed for Lead Pencils.

Poor Aladdin was decidedly peeved when his well-meaning mother exchanged an old brass lamp she found kicking about the house for a brand new shiny one. Naturally, since the old lamp was worth many times as much as the new one, as everyone who has read of Aladdin's Lamp knows.

In Tennessee—and in many other localities now—they are exchanging brand new shiny wire fences for disreputable old rail, zig-zag, Virginia, snake and stake-and-rider fences once laboriously split and put up by honest sons of toil generations ago. And the best part of it is that no one is peeved. The people who give away the brand new and expensive woven wire fences are delighted to take the old rail fences in exchange and the farmers are proud and happy to get the wire fences, so everyone is glad.

The answer is "Lead pencils."

More than two years ago we had stripped our cedar lands of practically all the old growth, and since then of all the rest of the cedars, except the mere saplings. Then the pencil manufacturers started to bring cedar from abroad and then the war came along—the crowned heads of Europe should worry about lead pencil shortage in America—and it began to look as though lead pencils would become as costly as eggs or coal or other commodities until certain agents discovered that throughout many sections of the country there were miles and miles of the very best sort of cedar, thoroughly dried and seasoned, serving as fences along highways and between fields and pastures.

Some of the old rails were sent to a pencil manufacturing concern. The wood was cut up into strips and proved to be the very best pencil cedar the manufacturers had been able to get hold of for years. There was no seasoning to do—it was in prime condition for making into pencils the moment it reached the shops.

"Get all you can of this wood," was the order to agents.

"What will you take for your rail fences?" one Tennessee farmer was asked.

"Gosh, I wouldn't sell them fences. It would take years to split up more rails," said the farmer. The agent had an idea.

"If I put in modern woven wire fences may I have the old wooden ones?"

"You bet you can, until they come and get you," was the answer.

"Who come and get me?" asked the agent.

"The crazy house people, where you broke out from," snorted the old farmer. But the agent ordered the fencing, and his men put it up and shipped the old cedar rails, which were from 25 to 75 years old, to the factories, and the value of the cedar was so much greater than the cost of the wire fences that the pencil makers were delighted.

Sleep on Life Preservers.

It must afford considerable consolation to the navy recruit to realize that the mattress on which he sleeps so comfortably at night will stand him in good stead in case of an accident to the ship. In fact the very buoyancy which makes it such a comfortable bed is also the quality which makes it possible for it to be converted at a moment's notice into a life preserver, says Popular Science.

The mattresses are stuffed with kapok, a lighter-than-cork material which is imported from the West Indies in bales similar to bales of cotton. It is made from the seeds and silk of a tree not unlike the cottonwood tree, but instead of being in puffy balls, the kapok is in slender threads, which when compressed make a mass that is six times more buoyant than cork.

Thin layers of the kapok are inclosed in strong ticking for the mattresses. Each mattress is provided with tapes long enough to tie around the body and over the shoulders.

Will Conserve Gasoline.

Whether John D. Rockefeller likes it or not, Rev. Dr. Thomas Glynn of Beaver Falls, Pa., has heeded the call of the government to conserve gasoline by inventing a gasoline engine that will reduce the cost of ocean joy riding just one-half. Doctor Glynn calls his new invention a hydrobuoyant engine. He makes "old man Gravity" perform most of the work. The main power of the engine is received from the buoyancy and gravity of water. The buoyancy engines are assisted and speeded by gasoline motors on the same principle as the well-drilling machines receive their auxiliary motion from gas engines. Doctor Glynn claims that his engine will revolutionize the economic efficiency in fuel. By the use of fly wheels, high and low gears and clutches it will be possible to propel the largest ocean liner across the big pond with 150 gallons of gasoline.

Good Plan, Too.

"Well, I have finished my Christmas shopping."

"How could you manage that so early?"

"All my gifts will be Liberty bonds."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
