SUFFERING FROM GAPES

ROY H. WAITE,
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

The gape worm disease is quite common in many sections, especially where chicks are grown on limited areas. This disease is caused by worms which attach themselves to the walls of the trachea or wind pipe of young birds. Gapes is spread by the chicks getting hold of the worms that have been coughed up or passed through the digestive tract of diseased birds. Each of these worms contains thousands of eggs, every one of which is ready to start up business in a new location. On infected land earthworms are thought to act as carriers of gape worm diseases.

The symptoms of gapeworm disease are so characteristic and so easily recognized that they hardly need description. The main symptom is the stretching of the neck and gaping for breath. Preventative measures are the most satisfactory. Where the disease is prevalent, change the runs frequently. If possible grow chicks on a new patch each year and cultivate the old runs when not in use. Where this cannot be readily done, heavy liming of the soil, say a bushel to 20 square feet, might be tried to advantage.

Keep chicks off of the ground when it is wet and earthworms are at the surface. Isolate all affected chicks to keep them from spreading the disease and treat them with the help of a horse hair, feather, or blue grass blade. A feather is quite satisfactory.

SUFFERING FROM GAPES.

Strip off the vane, leaving it feathered about one inch at the tip. Dip this in coal oil or turpentine and insert it in the windpipe giving it a twisting movement when withdrawing it. This will loosen the worms so that they can be coughed up.

What shall I have the children do at recess? What kind of entertainment can I give that will interest the entire neighborhood? How can I raise money for beautifying the school room? The summer school courses at the Maryland Agricultural College will help you solve these problems.

THE PEA LOUSE SHOULD BE CHECKED.

It Often Stands In the Way Of Making a Successful Pea Crop.

T. B. SYMONS,
Maryland Agricultural College.

This insect often stands between success and failure in a pea crop. Last season, particularly, it was the cause of failure in many crops of peas.

The insect can be controlled if the grower watches his crop and commences spraying immediate upon the first appearance of the pest. The pea lice increase enormously in a short period, therefore, growers should be ready to spray the vines with Blackleaf, a tobacco decoction, diluted at the rate of one part of the solution to 500 parts of water, when the first lice appear.

An eight per cent. Kerosene Emulsion will also control the insect if Blackleaf is not at hand. Also strong soap solution would be effective, but every pea-grower should have Blackleaf on hand.

Peas on the field can best be sprayed with a three or four row traction sprayer, as the first lice will appear probably before the vines fall down. A barrel sprayer can also be used for the work if necessary.

By all means watch the patch and catch the first generation of lice.

Canners who have peas grown under contract should have their representatives assist the growers in combating this pest. It will pay.

HOW TO TELL VALUE OF LIME.

Is Determined By the Kind Used and the Amount Of Impurities In It.

W. E. HANGER,
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

The relative value of the different forms of lime depends upon the amount of calcium they contain. When all materials are pure we have the following comparison giving the kind of lime and the possible percentage of calcium:

Burnt lime, stone or oyster shells	100
Hydrated lime	76
Ground lime stone or oyster shells	56

Therefore, it follows that the prices at the quarry or kiln for hydrated lime and ground lime stone or oyster shells should be given in the last two columns in the accompanying table, when burnt lime of good quality can be bought for the price indicated in the first column. The price, per ton:

Burnt Lime.	Hydrated Lime.	Ground Limestone or Oyster Shells.
$2.75	$2.09	$1.54
3.00	2.28	1.68
3.50	2.66	1.96
4.00	3.04	2.24
5.00	3.80	2.80
6.00	4.56	3.36
7.00	5.32	3.92

Agricultural lime is a very indefinite term and might be applied to any of the above forms, but is usually applied to the hydrated lime put on the market in bags ready for spreading on the land. It contains nothing that makes it of more value for crops than any other form of lime.
