IMPROVED WHEAT VARIETIES RETURN HIGH YIELDS

Practical Tests In Many Sections Of the State Demonstrate Higher Yields From Selected Wheats.

No question is more frequently heard among farmers at this season than, "What is the best variety of wheat and where can I get the seed?" The State Experiment Station undertakes to answer this question as a result of many tests with varieties it has conducted in various parts of the State on private farms and on its own experimental fields where uniform conditions of soil, climate, and fertilization have enabled such tests to be carried out with accuracy. During the past six or seven years there have been about one hundred varieties in test under these conditions.

A GOOD STAND.

Some of these varieties have been found to be very inferior and in consequence have been discarded. Others have been found that yield well in a favorable season, but to not stand up well when conditions are unfavorable. Still other varieties produce well almost every year regardless of conditions, and even in a very unfavorable season maintain a much higher yield than the poor varieties. It is in these last varieties that we are the most interested, since the record of their yields has been uniformly high, and they have proven their yielding qualities not only at the Experiment Station, but in many sections of the State, where they have been grown on private farms side by side with the native varieties.

Yields Of Improved Wheats Per Acre.

Variety.	In 1914.	5-Year Average.
Bearded Wheats.
Purple Straw	34.26	31.36
Dietz Longberry	34.72	30.61
Mammoth Red	37.11	31.03
Turkish Amber	37.38	30.05
Fulcaster	37.42	31.42
Smooth Wheats.
China	34.16	31.49
Currel's Prolific	38.88	31.03
Wheats Commonly Grown in Maryland.
Fultzo Mediterranean	38.07	25.66
Fultz	30.40	26.20

Compare these figures, and the wheat grower will see that the better varieties in a test of five years have lead the poorer and more commonly grown wheats of the State by an average increase of five bushels per acre, surely a gain worth considering, if, as we believe, it can be obtained by the seeding of improved varieties.

FLY IN WHEAT MAY BE CONTROLLED BY TIMELY SEEDING.

T. B. SYMONS.
Maryland Agricultural College.

The Hessian fly can be controlled largely by late planting, rotation of crops and not allowing volunteer wheat to grow on fallow ground. The treatment is essentially one in which the host plant is kept away until the last fall egg-laying brood of the insect has disappeared. The date of its disappearance depends on the latitude, altitude and weather conditions. A wet September may cause an early disappearance, while a long fall drought and warm weather may cause a much later disappearance. Taking all into consideration, wheat should not be sown in the vicinity of the following cities and towns of the State before the dates given:

Oakland, September 12 to 19; Hagerstown, October 1 to 7; Frederick, October 3 to 10! Westminster, September 26 to October 5; Rockville, October 3 to 8; La Plata, October 9 to 18; Cockeysville, October 3 to 10; Elkton, October 2 to 9; Belair, October 2 to 9; Chestertown, October 6 to 16; Easton, October 9 to 19; Salisbury, October 10 to 17.

It frequently happens in Southern Maryland that wheat does not yield well, and experience inclines us to believe that winter oats could be profitably grown in its place. Winter oats should be seeded in the fall, about the first of October and unless the season is particularly unfavorable, we ought to expect a heavy crop of grain.

The varieties of winter oats that are proving most successful in Maryland are Culberson, 206, Dewey, and Virginia Gray. The average yield at the Experiment Station farm for several years past has been close to 50 bushels per acre, with grain weighing from 34 to 37 pounds per bushel.

Adventist Conference.

The fifteenth annual session of the Chesapeake Conference of Seventh Day Adventists will be held in the church in Walbrook, corner Ninth street and North avenue, Baltimore, Md., October 4-11. The Chesapeake Conference is one of the eight local conferences that go to make up the Columbia Union Conference, the fourth biennial session of which was held in the same place April 28-May 10. The Chesapeake Conference comprises the States of Maryland and Delaware.
