FEROCIOUS DENIZEN OF SEA

California Spotted Moray Is a Capture Which No Fisherman Is Anxious to Make.

The California spotted moray, or "sea eel" as it is popularly called, is credited with being the most ferocious marine animal in existence. The commonly observed specimens are about three or four feet long, and about the size of a man's wrist. Their mouths are provided with needle-like teeth, and their jaws are so strong that cutting off the animal's head does not have the slightest effect in releasing its hold. Release can only be achieved by cutting the head to pieces so that the jaws cannot hold together.

Stories are told of fishermen being driven from their boats when a large specimen got loose after being hauled up, and these stories may easily be credited, considering the disposition of the small ones which are common to the California coast. Some of those found in the deeper water reach a length of six or eight feet, and a weight of 100 pounds. The animal can actually tie itself in a knot, and makes use of its extraordinary sinuosity for holding objects which it is eating, and for twisting and coiling around rocks.

UNABLE TO "FIGGER IT OUT"

Come to Think of It, Uncle Zeke Was Up Against Something of a Problem.

In a Georgia town dwells an old negro, who is supported by his wife. Uncle Zeke spends most of his time fishing in the brickyard pond; not that he expects to catch any fish, but "jest to have some harmless amusement, chile." Aunt Mary takes in washing.

One day one of Aunt Mary's patrons broached the subject to her, and suggested that she should not encourage her husband's laziness by supporting him in idleness, but Aunt Mary protested.

"'Deed, honey, mah ole man ain't lazy," she declared. "It's jest them scientific notions he got when he was a-wuckin' at de college."

"But what have scientific notions got to do with his not working?"

"Got a whole lot to do, honey," Aunt Mary said, gathering up her basket. "Yo' see, dem ideas he's got was dat it wasn't healthy to wuck after meals; an' he ain't been able to figger out no way to 'complish dat, not yit, 'less he gives up eatin' an' course he can't do dat."

A Complete Angler.

"Clarence, come in to dinner!"

Mrs. Jones stood at the door of her cottage, looking over toward a small boy who was fishing with a bent pin and herring bone on the brim of a puddle.

"Clarence—dinner!"

Still Clarence fished.

"Clarence!"

No answer.

"If you don't come in to dinner at once, my son," threatened Mrs. Jones, "I won't give you any at all!"

Only a sudden tension of the small boy's frame as he gazed eagerly into the depths of the murky puddle.

Mrs. Jones' patience was at an end. Silently she crept up behind the delinquent and then, suddenly seizing him by the shoulders, shook him violently to and fro.

"You rascal!" she cried. "Didn't you hear me call?"

"No, ma," said the youngster stoutly. "I didn't hear you the first three times and the last time I had a bite!" —Exchange.

Dweller in a Cave.

Cave bears were great big beasts, weighing half a ton or more. They lived in Europe during paleolithic times, and were contemporaneous with our ancestors. They get their name from the fact that their bones are usually found in caves. All bears, as a matter of fact, prefer a den in some rocky hole to live and die in.

Cave bears are all extinct now, but their near relatives, the Siberian brown bear and the Alaskan Kodiak bear, are alive. Scientists were at a loss as to where to place these huge beasts until they discovered Pleistocene affinities for them. Although a cave bear stood as big as a small cow, he was relatively inoffensive. He preferred rooting in the ground or robbing an occasional bee tree to preying on animals and men.

New Musical Instruments.

It has been said by musicians that the violin family is composed of two pygmies—the violin and the viola—and two giants—the violoncello and the double bass. It is reasonable to suppose that the great gap between these two extremes could be advantageously diminished. It is not surprising, then, that two well-known French musicians, father and son, have, after years of study and experimentation, created a number of intermediary instruments which have entirely changed the nature of the violin family.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Preserving Homes of Famous Men.

The other day the chamber decided that the hermas or cottage at Serignan in Provence where the great entomologist, Henri Fabre, lived and died should become national property. But the Provencaux are not yet content. They now demand a like honor for their great Mistral, whose mas is at Maillane. Mistral's widow still resides there as does the poet's pet spaniel, which wears a collar with the proud inscription "I am Jougeor, the dog of the poet Mistral."—London Times.

TWICE PROVEN

If you suffer backache, sleepless nights, tired, dull days and distressing urinary disorders, don't experiment. Read this twice-told testimony. It's Chestertown evidence—doubly proven.

Mrs. Jas. P. Parrott, 200 S. Front St., gave the following statement Aug. 17, 1916: "I had been troubled off and on with kidney disorder and backache. My kidneys were irregular in action and caused annoyance. I had spells of dizziness and saw black spots and fiery flashes before my eyes I was tired and miserable most of the time. I began to use Doan's Kidney Pills and they gave me relief. I generally keep Doan's on hand and can recommend them highly."

On Jan. 26, 1921, Mrs. Parrott said: "Doan's Kidney Pills have practically cured me of kidney complaint. It is seldom I have the least trouble now, as I resort to Doan's at the first sign of my kidneys being out of order and they give me prompt relief."
