HAD MANY TRIALS IN LIFE

Path of the Inventor of the Sewing Machine by No Means a Bed of Roses.

Elias Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine, was born in Spencer, Mass., July 9, 1819, and died in Brooklyn, N. Y., October 3, 1867. He lived with his father, who was both farmer and miller, till 1836, working upon the farm and in the mill and attending the district school during the winters. He then learned the trade of machinist, and experimented in inventing a sewing machine. The model was completed and the patent issued September 10, 1846. A patent was also taken out in England, but from this the inventor realized nothing. After constructing four machines in the United States he visited England in 1847, remaining two years. He returned to Boston entirely destitute, and resumed his trade for the support of his family. From this period until 1854 he was involved in expensive law suits, when the principal infringers of his patents acknowledged his rights, and arranged to manufacture sewing machines under licenses from him. After this he made a large fortune from his invention. He served as a private in the Seventeenth Connecticut volunteers during the Civil war. He was the recipient of the Legion of Honor cross and many medals.

ANCIENT VILLAGE IN ENGLAND

Interesting Archeological Discovery Recently Made in the County of Surrey.

Remains of an ancient village, the first portion of which was discovered in 1904 when sewage beds were made, have been found recently during sewage development work at Wisley, Surrey. The date of the village is considered to be from 50 B. C. to A. D. 50.

Investigations have been very difficult because most of the site of the village was dug away in 1904. On the present occasion a few hut dwellings had been found. These consisted of circular pits, six to seven feet across and a couple of feet deep. They were filled up with sand, but were quite distinct when seen in section.

They contained minute fragments of broken pottery. Unfortunately, the nature of the sandy soil was such that all bone, metal and all wooden implements had been destroyed. Pottery was the only thing that could be found, and it was only in two places that the pieces of pottery were large enough to be of any archeological value.

Years ago, at the foot of the village, a "dugout" canoe, evidently belonging to the village, was discovered. That is now in Weybridge museum. Flint implements were also found at that time.

Broadcasting Hotel Orders.

Horace Greeley of the weird handwriting could never have held the position of a hotel manager or an assistant manager of one of our modern hostelries. His penmanship was too illegible. The management of big hotel departments, from the cold storage to the linen departments, involves the use of the tel-autograph to a marvelous extent. Mine jolly host of the old-time hostelry needs to be an electrical expert to manage things by modern methods. He sits in his office and the moving finger beside him which records his orders is a tel-autograph, which inscribes his messages at the same time in as many departments as he desires by the pressure of a finger upon electric buttons.

Man's Age of Strength.

At what age is a man's muscular strength greatest?

It might be natural to suppose that with increasing age the muscles, which develop with constant use, would become stronger, but such is not the case.

It has been proved by experiment that the amount a man uses his muscles does not influence the increase and decline of strength.

These tests showed that where the average lifting power of a boy is 280 pounds, it should be increased by his twentieth year to 320 pounds. A maximum of 365 pounds, or thereabouts, should be attained by his thirtieth year, after which a decline in strength sets in. Between forty nad fifty this decline is rapid.

Anglo-Saxon Umbrellas.

Umbrellas were used to keep off the rain by our Anglo-Saxon forefathers long before the Norman Conquest. An old Saxon MS. in the British museum has the accompanying picture of a servant holding an umbrella over his crowned lord. It is stated that when Queen Matilda reigned for a short troubled time umbrellas were in common use. In Queen Anne's reign the use of the umbrella was confined to two women. Jonas Hanway who died in 1786 re-introduced the umbrella into England for general use, whence its use spread to Europe and the world over.

Sixty Miles of Pyramids.

From the summit of the great pyramid there is a grand view southward, down a straggling but imposing line of pyramids rising dimly as far as one can see on the southern horizon. Each pyramid was a royal tomb, and for us each such tomb means that a king lived, ruled and died. The line is over sixty miles long, and the oldest pyramids represent the first great age of Egyptian civilization after the land was united under one king. We may call it the Pyramid age, and it lasted from 3000 to 2500 B. C.—James H. Breasted in "Ancient Times."
