THE PUBLIC HEALTH NURSE

Who She Is And What Her Duties Are

Do you know the real difference between a trained nurse and a public health nurse? Many people do not.

A public health nurse is a trained nurse who has had special instruction in public health work and who spends all her time, not in the care of the sick, as does the trained nurse, but in the prevention of sickness. You employ a trained nurse when someone in your family is very ill and needs especial care and attention. The public health nurse is employed by the state, the county, the city, the town or the village or sometimes by private organizations such as the local public health association, the local tuberculosis society, the Red Cross, and by large stores and factories. The trained nurse is a sickness nurse; the public health nurse is strictly a health nurse. The former tries to help you get well, the latter to keep you well.

A public health nurse can be of great assistance to physicians, in that she can relieve the physicians of the burden of explaining and demonstrating the methods of treatment, and can persuade patients to persevere in correct treatments. She does not make distinctions among physicians, but extends courtesy and respect to all. The public health nurse never gives nursing attention to any patient who is not under a physician's care and it is not her duty to remain in the home over an extended period. Her methods are those of demonstration and instruction.

Health officers and physicians are expected to supply a public health nurse with necessary information and their full co-operation. Do the physicians in your county know your public health nurse?

What is the work of the public health nurse? She teachers mothers how to keep babies well. She visits cases of infectious disease and instructs the family how to prevent the disease from spreading. She assists the school medical inspector in the physical examination of school children, and afterwards visits the homes and urges parents to secure the correction of defects found. For example, a child found to be near-sighted, the parents are urged to take the child to an oculist and have her supplied with eye glasses. In tubercular cases the public health nurse visits the patient, supervises his care in the home, helps in securing his admission to a sanatorium, if this seems advisable, and advises him in the care of his sputum, so that others in the family may not be infected. Other persons in the patient's home, especially children, are assisted in securing a necessary physical examination.

The work of the public health nurse has proved to be one of the most effective means of protecting the health of a community, and is an important factor in the prevention and control of communicable disease, because she visits and instructs the individual in his home.

There are many other things a public health nurse can do! She is as necessary in protecting your health and life as the policeman and fireman are in protecting your property.

Kent County has a public health nurse and she has done good work and is a big factor in the life of the community.

A Splendid Example of Enterprise and Organized Effort

The Hall Mark of Service

The kind of service a Great organization is capable of giving in a great emergency under private ownership.

The Philadelphia Inquirer on Wednesday, June 13, published the following editorial:

"AN OBJECT LESSON IN RAILROAD EFFICIENCY"

The word efficiency has been greatly overworked in recent years, but it can be applied in all justice to the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad who are meeting the emergency produced by the destruction of the trainshed of the Broad Street Station.

While the conflagration was still in progress heads of the engineering and construction departments were in consultation, and the fire had not been extinguished before numerous wrecking crews were at work. In the meantime the traffic department was called upon to make a readjustment of service, and special bulletins promptly informed the traveling public of the disposition of trains.

In less than twenty-four hours after the fire started the builders were employed in restoring platforms. Men had been summoned from everywhere, but there was a minimum of confusion, because every squad had a definite duty. It has been a splendid object lesson in efficiency on the part of the world's greatest railroad. In these days of speed, demoralized train service spells general congestion, and that this should have been so largely and quickly overcome is a matter of congratulation.

The American spirit is shown at its best when meeting seemingly unsurmountable difficulties. Say that a thing is impossible in this country and, as if by magic, men will appear to make it possible. Those who travel may be subject to some temporary inconvenience, but if the public be as patient as the railroad company has been enterprising, there will not be much reason for complaint."

☞Train service in and out of Broad Street Station has already practically been restored to normal conditions.
