Is assured you when you buy Dr. Pierce's family medicines—for all the ingredients entering into them are printed on the bottle-wrappers and their formulas are attested under oath as being complete and correct. You know just what you are paying for and that the ingredients are gathered from Nature's laboratory, being selected from the most valuable native medicinal roots found growing in our American forests and while potent to cure are perfectly harmless even to the most delicate women and children. Not a drop of alcohol enters into their composition. A much better agent is used both for extracting and preserving the medicinal principles used in them, viz.—pure triple-refined glycerine. This agent possesses intrinsic medicinal properties of its own, being a most valuable antiseptic and antiferment, nutritive and soothing demulcent.

Glycerine plays an important part in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia and weak stomach, attended by sour risings, heart-burn, foul breath, coated tongue, poor appetite, gnawing feeling in stomach, biliousness and kindred derangements of the stomach, liver and bowels.

Besides curing all the above distressing ailments, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a specific for all diseases of the mucous membranes, as catarrh, whether of the nasal passages or of the stomach, bowels or pelvic organs. Even in its ulcerative stages it will yield to this sovereign remedy if its use be persevered in. In Chronic Catarrh of the Nasal passages, it is well, while taking the "Golden Medical Discovery" for the necessary constitutional treatment, to cleanse the passages freely two or three times a day with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. This thorough course of treatment generally cures the worst cases.

In coughs and hoarseness caused by bronchial, throat and lung affections, except consumption in its advanced stages, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most efficient remedy, especially in those obstinate, hang-on coughs caused by irritation and congestion of the bronchial mucous membranes. The "Discovery" is not so good for acute coughs arising from sudden colds, nor must it be expected to cure consumption in its advanced stages—no medicine will do that—but for all the obstinate, chronic coughs, which, if neglected, or badly treated, lead up to consumption, it is the best medicine that can be taken.

Bewitched by a Blond Fairy.

By LESTER ROSE.

Copyright, 1907, by Homer Sprague.

Under ordinary circumstances the trip across the Atlantic would have been quiet indeed. The eastbound traffic was light, and most of it went to the newer and faster boats. There were less than fourscore passengers in the first cabin, and Dorsey Adams looked forward to a long, quiet week with Nell Sommers.

For more than a year Dorsey had sought to win Nell's hand and with fair prospect of eventual success. When he heard that the family was going to Europe for the winter he planned to take the same boat, and the evident pleasure with which Nell greeted the announcement greatly cheered the anxious Adams.

But the boat had not reached the banks before the course of true love showed its customary unwillingness to move smoothly. They had, in fact, been out less than twenty-four hours when the love course began to resemble the serpentine windings of the Mississippi and evince a far greater roughness than the November seas.

Miss Sommers had spent her first night aboard in the agonies of seasickness, and it was late the next morning when a careful steward and a sympathetic stewardess helped the exhausted girl to the deck and comfortably installed her in a deck chair, where Dorsey presently found her.

Dorsey seated himself on a stool beside her chair and prepared to make himself diverting, but it was Miss Sommers who found the diversion. Against Dorsey's dark coat her sharp eyes spied a golden strand. She leaned forward to remove it, and the next moment she was holding it accusingly before his eyes, while her glance sought the sunny haired soubrette who was crossing to play the London music halls.

"You must have missed me last night, as you say," said Miss Sommers bitterly.

"But look here, Nell," declared Dorsey miserably. "I swear to you that I spent the whole evening in the smoking room except for a few minutes on deck just before I turned in. I was alone all the evening."

SHE WAS HOLDING IT ACCUSINGLY BEFORE HIS EYES.

"Do not add perjury to your other offenses," said Miss Sommers coldly. "I hate a man who does not tell the truth. Therefore I hate you. Please go away."

Dorsey went, miserably enough, while Nell Sommers sank back in her steamer chair lost in her bitter thoughts. She liked Dorsey, and it cut her to the quick that he should have spent the evening flirting with the little soubrette, while she herself lay in her berth vainly wishing the ship would run aground if only the awful rolling of the vessel might stop.

Dorsey, manlike, made for the solace of the smoking room. At the head of the companionway lounged one of the men who had been engaged in a poker game the night before. Now his face was wreathed in smiles as he followed the miserable lover to the deck below.

"I see you were caught with the goods," he said, with a laugh, as he took a seat at Dorsey's table. Adams looked at him savagely.

"I wish you'd mind your own blamed business!" he growled. The stranger only smiled pleasantly.

"Don't be nasty, old man," he counseled. "I'm not trying to rub it in. I want to help you out."

There was real friendliness in the tone, and Dorsey colored as he held out his hand.

"You might go and tell her that I was here in the smoking room all last evening," he suggested. "That was the row."

"A lot of good it would do to say that," said the intruder, with a smile. "She would simply declare that I was bolstering you up in an untruth. You've got to do better than that, old chap. By the way, my name's Greyson—Ben Greyson. What's yours?"

Dorsey made reply, and over the highballs they planned a campaign. The first gun was fired at luncheon when Greyson leaned across the table and advised Dorsey that there was a hair on his coat. Dorsey carefully removed a long golden strand while he made the retort courteous and pointed out to Greyson the fact that there was a hair upon his own coat. The little soubrette at the end of the table beamed mirthfully upon the abashed men.

"I'm glad they are so long," she declared. "If it wasn't such a long one, folks might think it was one of mine. Ain't it funny that I'm the only blond on board?" she ran on. "It's real blond, too," she said proudly as she shook her yellow curls.

Greyson passed her the hair he had removed from his coat. "If your hair was that long," he said, with a smile, "you could work in a museum instead of on the stage."

"Gee!" said the small soubrette admiringly. "I guess one of the 'hair tonic' sisters must be aboard. That hair's five feet if it's an inch."

"Let's ask the purser," suggested Greyson. "He knows the passenger list, and I guess he knows the blond too. There's a hair on his coat."

The purser, who was flirtatiously inclined and who had been making himself very attractive to the little soubrette, blushingly denied that there was any such person as a blond with long hair aboard, but the others at his table refused to believe his statement and kept up the joke.

The joke became a mystery when long golden hairs continued to be found on the coats of the men passengers and even occasionally on the dresses of the women. Even the gruff old captain swore softly under his breath when one of the incriminating hairs was found on his coat to the great glee of his officers, who knew him to be a woman hater of the most pronounced type.

As the days progressed the mystery deepened and in default of matters of greater moment became the chief topic of talk. Through it all Dorsey was coldly courteous to Nell, and she returned the coldness with interest.

It was not until the last day of the run that he ventured to reopen his case for a second pleading. Miss Sommers had come on deck after dinner and had sought a place in the bow where she could watch the swirling waters slip past all afoam from the impact with the prow. The clouds were breaking up after a storm, and great billows of vapor filled the sky, which rode serenely in the heavens.

So engrossed was she with her thoughts that she did not hear footsteps until a form loomed beside her and a hand lightly clasped her own.

"Am I forgiven yet for what I did not do?" asked Dorsey softly. "Believe me, Nell, I did not spend that first evening with Miss Clarence. I don't know how that hair got on my coat honestly I don't. There seems to be some mystery to the whole affair."

"I was wrong," confessed Miss Sommers. "Do you know, Dorsey, I believe that this boat is bewitched by a blond?"

"That's it," cried Dorsey. "It must be witchcraft, and you will have to help me exorcise the spirit."

"How?" asked Miss Sommers wonderingly. "I am not versed in the casting out of spirits."

"Make me proof against their charms by marrying me," he explained. "Will you, dear?"

"I think I shall have to," said Nell softly as the moon discreetly went behind a cloud.

It was late that evening that Adams and Greyson sat together in a corner of the smoking room.

"Here's to the spirit of the blond bewitcher," said Greyson as he lifted his glass, "and here's long life and happiness to the happy pair. I'm glad that I helped to straighten out the trouble even though it did cost me my very best sample of the wonderful effects of Hairy's hair healer. It's wonderful stuff, grows hair on the baldest pate and heals wounded feelings. It was a hard job, though, to plant all those hairs without the victims finding out the trick and spoiling it all."

An Exalted Yawn.

"When I went to church last Sunday," said a young woman visiting Washington, "I sat directly behind a high executive officer for whom I have always had the greatest veneration and whom I have regarded as almost more than mortal. I tried hard not to be rude and stare at him too much, but I could not help my eyes wandering toward him occasionally. I glanced at him just once, near the end of the sermon, and what do you think he was doing? He was yawning, and he yawned a large and vigorous yawn, which came to him so suddenly that he did not have time to hide it behind his hand. I must confess that I was delighted. My veneration for the executive officer is just as great as it ever was, but I am glad I found out with my own eyes that he is subject to ordinary human weaknesses and cannot help yawning during a sermon."—Washington Star.

Heat Tests of Clothing.

An interesting experiment made in June by a physician proved conclusively that for the sake of coolness only white should be worn in hot weather. The physician spread out in an intense sunshine a large piece of white cloth, another of dark yellow, another of light green, another of dark green, another of blue and another of black. Then, with the help of six thermometers, he made the following table of the various heats which each color received from the sunlight: White, 100 degrees; dark yellow, 140 degrees; light green, 155 degrees; dark green, 168 degrees; blue, 198 degrees; black, 208 degrees. Thus the physician proved that in July or August the man in white is a little less than twice as cool as the man in blue and a little more than twice as cool as the man in black.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DRUNK LIST WORRIES.

Some of the persons whose names have been published in saloons as habitual drunkards threaten to bring suits for damages against the individuals supposed to be responsible for the circulation of the list in Cumberland.

Friends of some of the persons cited are also indignant. It is claimed that when a saloonkeeper is notified not to sell a person alleged to be a habitual drunkard it is for his own information, and not a matter to be spread broadcast. It is also contended that some of the persons mentioned on the list, which includes 32 names, cannot legally be classed among habitual drunkards. Several of the saloonkeepers have added names in writing to the published list, and one saloon has 38 names exposed. The head of the list is a former prominent business man.

The list is headed in large type "Liquor Dealers' Association." The identity of the organization is not known. There is a "retail liquor dealers' association" here, but the officers disclaim any knowledge of the list. It is said that the list was published on the responsibility of several saloonkeepers, who had banded together for self-protection. To sell a habitual drunkard after having been notified not to do so is to invite indictment and also suit for civil damages. The list published is according to a statement printed thereon, by legal authority.

Never has there been such a stir among persons addicted to drink. It is feared by many that subsequent lists may appear, and such action might embarras some very prominent people. Some of the men on the list have "braced up" and are leading sober lives to show that they can do so. Some victims have been holding informal indignation meetings. There was a conspicuous absence on the part of the men named in the list at their usual saloon haunts.

NATURE AND A WOMAN'S WORK

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Nature and a woman's work combined have produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers they relied upon the roots and herbs of the field to cure disease and mitigate suffering.

The Indians on our Western Plains to-day can produce roots and herbs for every ailment, and cure diseases that baffle the most skilled physicians who have spent years in the study of drugs.

From the roots and herbs of the field Lydia E. Pinkham more than thirty years ago gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills, more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now recognized as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

Mrs. Bertha Muff, of 515 N.C. St., Louisiana, Mo., writes:

"Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my troubles public.

"For twelve years I had been suffering with the worst forms of female ills. During that time I had eleven different physicians without help. No tongue can tell what I suffered, and at times I could hardly walk. About two years ago I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice. I followed it, and can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice restored health and strength. It is worth mountains of gold to suffering women."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Muff, it will do for other suffering women.
