MOTHER SHIPTON.

Some of Her Strange Prophecies That Were Fulfilled.

"When Mother Shipton heard that King Henry VIII. should be king and Cardinall Wolsey should be at Yorke she said that Cardinall Wolsey would never come to Yorke, which the king and the cardinall hearing, being angry, sent the Duke of Suffolk and the Lord Dorcy to her, who came with their men disguised to the king's house near Yorke, where, leaving their men, they went to Mr. Beasley in Yorke and desired him to go with them to Mother Shipton's house. When they came they knocked at the doors. She said, 'Come in, Mr. Beasley, and those honorable lords with you,' and Mr. Beasley would have put in the lords before him, but she said: 'Come in, Mr. Beasley. You know the way. They do not.'

"Then they went into the house where there was a great fire, and they drank and were very merry.

"'Mother Shipton,' said the duke, 'you said the cardinall should never see Yorke.'

"'Yea,' said she, 'I said he might see Yorke, yet never come to it.'

"'But,' said the duke, 'when he comes to Yorke thou shalt be burned.'

"'We shall see that,' said she, and, plucking her handkerchief off her head, she threw it into the fire, and it would not burn. Then she took it and put it on again. Then said the duke, 'What meanne you by this?'

"She replied, 'If this had burned, I might have burned.'

"'Mother Shipton,' quoth the duke, 'what do you think of me?'

"'Why, lord,' said she, 'the time will come when you will be as low as I am.' (The duke was afterward beheaded.)

"My Lord Piercy said, 'And what say you of me?'

"'My lord,' said she, 'shoo your horse in the quick and you shall doe well, but your body will be burned in Yorke pavement, and your head shall be stolen from the Barre and carried into France.' (This proved true, for he rose in rebellion in the north, and by not flying when he might he was taken and beheaded in Yorke, where his body was burned, and his head was stolen away and carried into France.)

"Not longe after came the cardinall to Cawood, and, going to the top of the Tower, he asked, 'Where stands Yorke?' and said that one said that he should never see Yorke. They shewed him Yorke and that he would soon be there; but, being sent for by the king, he died in his way to London at Leicester of a Laske."—Reo Bennett in Metropolitan Magazine.

THE TREE'S ROOTS.

Something About What Is Called Plant Intelligence.

As the animal is nearer to us than the vegetable, so is animal intelligence nearer akin to our own than plant intelligence. We hear of plant physiology, but not yet of plant psychology. When a plant growing in a darkened room leans toward the light the leaning, we are taught, is a purely mechanical process. The effect of the light upon the cells of the plant brings it about in a purely mechanical way, but when an animal is drawn to the light the process is a much more complex one and implies a nervous system. It is thought by some that the roots of a water loving plant divine the water from afar and run toward it. The truth is the plant or tree sends its roots in all directions, but those on the side of water find the ground moister in that direction and their growth is accelerated, while the others are checked by the dryness of the soil. An ash tree stands on a rocky slope where the soil is thin and poor twenty or twenty-five feet from my garden. After awhile it sent so many roots down into the garden and so robbed the garden vegetables of the fertilizers that we cut the roots off and dug a trench to keep the tree from sending more. Now, the gardener thought the tree divined the rich pasturage down below there and reached for it accordingly. The truth is, I suppose, that the roots on that side found a little more and better soil and so pushed on till they reached the garden, where they were at once so well fed that they multiplied and extended themselves rapidly. The tree waxed strong and every season sent more and stronger roots into the garden.—John Burroughs in Outing Magazine.

Didn't Know It Could Be Done.

"I didn't see you in church Sunday morning," said Mrs. Oldcastle.

"No," replied her hostess, toying with her $2,500 solitaire, "I was so nervous I knew I couldn't sit still if I went so I gave up and laid in bed nearly the whole morning."

"That was too bad. You ought to have been there. Dr. Miggsworth excoriated several of our leading financiers, and considerable anger was exhibited by some of them."

"Is that so? I didn't know they could do such things in our church. I s'posed only the pope had that power."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not Those Sellers.

"What were the best six sellers when you were in New York?" inquired the Indiana literary expert of his prosaic neighbor.

"I'm blamed if I know," was the latter's reply. "As far as I can remember we only visited five of 'em, an I didn't pay much attention to their locations."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Measuring His Influence.

"Why don't you come right out and say you don't like that man who wants to marry your daughter?"

"What for?" asked Mr. Cumrox. "He's popular enough with mother and the girls now."—Washington Star.

WILD OUTBURST OF JOY.

Mafeking Night, When London Flung Aside All Dignity.

"Mafeking night" gave a verb to the English language. "To maffik," defined in a phrase, means to turn everything upside down in a wild outburst of joy. Certainly we did turn everything upside down that night—Friday, May 18, 1900—in London, and we had joy and to spare to justify us. It was not merely that Mafeking was relieved—the town in which Baden-Powell and his men, edging close to starvation, had sat tight so long and so pluckily; it was the far greater relief that came to all England at the end of that dark winter through which all England, silently, doggedly, had taken its nasty punishment, with the winning at last of a substantial victory. The tense strain was relaxed suddenly, and London, with good cause for it, maffiked exultingly through all that ad night long.

Tiddlers are peacock tail feathers. Tiddling is tickling other people's noses with them. With my own happy eyes that night I saw two Whitechapel girls, with proper Whitechapel curls twirled on their temples, tiddle the nose of a Pall Mall policeman! And that policeman—imagine, if you please, all possible impossibilities fused into one single ultra violet ray of incredibility—fairly thrust forward his law enbodying nose to be tiddled by those worse than regicides—he was a Pall Mall policeman, remember—and benignly rewarded them with the sneeze of their desire!

On the same lines I may cite another example from that same evening. I saw on Piccadilly an intensely respectable looking Englishman—middle aged, stout, gray whiskered, dressed in seemly black and wearing a seemly top hat—who most obviously was a member of the conservative middle class, a well to do city man, I should say, with a tidy villa at Shepherd's Bush or Hackney, who on Sundays very likely handed the plate. And this by rights typically phlegmatic Briton was seated, with his chubby legs very wide outspread before him, on the roof of a four wheeler, and he had the union jack in one hand and the standard in the other, and he was coming along the middle of one of the great streets of London in the thick of the roaring crowd filling it waving those national banners with an incomparable fervor and hurrahing just as loud as he possibly could hurrah!

But I saw no mote in the eye of my phlegmatic English brother—we were about of an age—flag waving and hurrahing up there on the roof of his growler, possibly because at the moment I had something of a beam in my own. Strictly speaking, the relief of Mafeking was not my affair at all. But, God bless me, there I was, too, with my standard and my union jack (they cost me sixpence apiece, mounted on little bamboo poles, and as long as I live I shall cherish them), and I went about London that night waving those flags just as crazily as anybody and roared away with the national anthem and "Soldiers of the Queen" and the "Absentminded Beggar" just as loudly as anybody. — Thomas A. Janvier in Harper's.

A Chummy, Fearless Bird.

So unafraid are humming birds of man that they will readily enter open windows of houses if they see flowers within. I have even read of their visiting the artificial flowers on a lady's hat when she was walking out, and other writers speak of their taking sugar from between a person's lips. In a room they become confused and, being so frail, are apt to injure themselves by striking against objects. More than once I or members of my family have caught the frightened little waifs for their good and released them in the open air. It is of no use to try to keep them in captivity unless possibly it were in a greenhouse where there were plenty of flowers, for no artificial food has ever been found which will nourish them. Yet even there they would probably kill themselves by flying against the glass.—H. K. Job in Outing Magazine.

Lost His Suit.

"Lend my dress suit? Not on your life!" replied the man. "I might get it in the neck the way Corrigan did."

"What happened to Corrigan?"

"Well, two years ago a fellow whom he knew slightly borrowed Corrigan's dress suit to go to a dance. Next thing Corrigan heard was that the fellow had dropped dead of heart disease. Corrigan went to the funeral to do the right thing. When he peeked into the casket he noticed the deceased had on his dress suit. The undertaker had picked it out because it was the only dark suit in the fellow's wardrobe. Corrigan wept real tears when he saw them lowering the coffin into the grave. That was his first and last dress suit. He vowed he'd never get another."—San Francisco Chronicle.

In Doubt.

A man who does not mind a joke at his own expense says he went into a chemist's recently and asked for some morphine. The shopman objected to giving it without a prescription.

"Do I look like a man who would kill himself?" the customer asked.

"I don't know, I'm sure," said the shopman, "but if I looked like you I should be tempted."—London Answers.

Going Some.

Fanning—So the family in the flat next yours has a phonograph, eh? How many records have they? Frick—Heaven only knows! But they broke their best previous record last Sunday by five hours and twenty-six minutes.—Puck.

Martial, a Spanish poet of the first century, wrote, "A face that cannot smile is never good."
